Gordon, Queen Victoria Rifles and the Rifle Brigade joined them and capture seemed imminent because gineer at Dawson. the Germans were on three sides. On the fourth side was the Channel where British warships cruised some miles away. The British soldiers signalled vainly but "X" decided to swim to the ships. When he was out a mile the tide turned! against him and he had to strike for shore.

Joined by two other officers and a private, he decided to break through the encircling Germans They avoided capture for two days but finally a German patrol captured two. Another officer and "X" however, escaped to a small wood.

Footprints Told

They spent the night in a hut and awoke to find Germans standing over them. Their captors said Vancouver and Victoria. they had been traced by their footprints across the fields. With other prisoners, they were herded! into a column guarded by machinegun-carrying trucks. Even failed to daunt "X." He saw his chance on the fourth day of the march and slipped down a passage between two houses, raced across fields to a barn and then posed as caretaker.

He started for Britanny June 114 and thought capture imminent again. But he was only required to help bury a pig. For this, the Germans rewarded him with a meal and a cup of coffee.

Later other Germans stopped him but in voluble French he was able to convince them he was refugee. Eventually he reached the coast and found a boat. At midnight June 28 he started rowing and in three days sighted land. But it was the Channel Islands. then occupied by the Germans. The tide forced him back to the French coast when he beat a hurried retreat from the islands and he started looking for another boat a week-long search he found a motor launch and a supply of gasoline. Late in July started once more across the Channel and sighted the Needles, a collection of rocks in the Solent. A patrol boat picked him up the lnext morning.

D. C. McRae returned to the city Thursday evening on the Prince Rupert after making the round trip to WRONG Hat, initials A. L., taken Ketchikan and Stewart. He found a good deal of snow and winery conditions at both Ketchikan and Stewart and felt Prince Rupert to be blessed in having no snow. He LOST—Sum of money between Rex was impressed with the busy air of Ketchikan.
