There are tales that can be told of boarding parties, tender to be opened at the hour of armed with modern revolvers where their fore-fathers had borne cutlasses, swarming into enemy ships. Their weapons may have been modernized, but they boasted B. C., or Marine Building, Vancouver, the same spirit as that of their predecessors of yesteryear who had made the fame of British seamen resound through the Seven Seas. German prisoners were landed, but the silent service said nothing of how they had been captured and what had become of their ships. The navy at war was interested only in the job it had to do: to talk about that job! was not in its tradition. But, in British Columbia, which has its own seafaring tradition, the work and worth of the fighting ships of the navy was recognized with pride, for in their operations men of British Columbia were playing their full part. Even as they had played their full part in building up Canada's navy, in two years of war, from less than 2000 officers and men to 25,000 officers and men-of whom British Columbians formed a quarter of the officers and an eighth of the men! Which is one of the reasons why Navy Week, sponsored by the Navy League of Canada, means much to the Pacific coast province.
