CANADIANS AT WAR

SAM ROBERTSON.
 who recently scooped the world on the torpedoing of several vessels in a convoy with which he sailed to Canada. Soon to resume his post as London Superintendent. Robertson will move to the front as a War Correspondent should Hitler attempt invasion. Thirty-five, Robertson is a veteran of 21 years newspaper work in Canada, the U.S. and England.

Besides these, The CP London staff includes six other young men who share the fortunes of the front line to bring you news of the bomb blitz, the changes war has brought in Britain's way of life, the stirring deeds of her navy, army and air force and the stories of those who have escaped death from German torpedoes.

They have been bombed in their homes, on the way to work and in their former office—later destroyed by incendiary bombs. One heard Nazi bombs thud nearby as he lay helpless in hospital. But none has been hurt; all are eager to stay in London for the duration.

 The hallmark of news integrity.

ROSS MUNRO.
 27-year-old CP War Correspondent, who lives with the Canadian Corps and writes daily stories on its activities, from invasion preparations to softball games. Scion of a distinguished newspaper family, Munro left his Ottawa post on a few hours notice last September to sail on a former U.S. destroyer to England and don a War Correspondent's uniform.
