Making Regular Gains . . .

As we watch the progress of the war in Russia the! tendency is to feel that every time the Russians lose a battle it is a loss to the British. In a newspaper article, Otto Strasser points out that really every battle lost or in the supreme court of British won in Russia is a gain for the British. A year ago the in the Matter of the Estate of John Russians were allies of the Germans so every battle in which Hitler loses men or munitions places us in a much ministration were issued by the better position than we were in four months ago.

The crucial period of the war for Britain was about of the late John Soren Nelson, late of a year ago when Stalin was helping the enemy with muchneeded material and moral support and encouragement Rupert on June 18th, 1941. All persons to enemy countries. It was only because she was attack- quired to pay the amount of their in- | Morrison and Mrs. Roy Morrison lumbia, Engineer who died near Ti-ell. ed by Germany and not through any conviction on the persons having claims against the said part of Stalin that Russia is now fighting our enemy. me properly verified on or before We are glad to have Russia with us but, when Stalin alst day of December A D. 1941 failing pleads for more British help, it must be remembered that, when Britain was in dire need of help a year ago, she got not a single plane from Russia, not even a word of encouragement. This is not said in disparagement of the Russians but simply to remind those who are continually! harping on why Britain does not send an army to help the Russians.

First Things First . . .

We must remember that, when Britain sent help to France, there followed the disaster of Dunkirk. When she unwisely rushed troops to Norway without proper air support it came near to losing the war. When troops were rushed from North Africa to Greece the British were driven out of a number of North African positions and are still being besieged at Tobruk. The successful movements were in Iran and Iraq where proper preparations had been made. Any invasion of Germany must be made not to save Russia but to win the war against Giermany.

The action of some Canadians seems to indicate that Russia means more to them than Canada. When they became naturalized, if they did, they became British subjects and no political idealism can change them into Russians. We are glad to have Russia with us and the Russians have every right to work out their own political system in any way they wish. We all hope to see them defeat Germany and we are already sending them as much help as we can afford, but we must always remember that the defence of the British Empire is a huge problem and that it must be more important to us than the defence of Russia.

can on their feet. Not a little ingenuity has uncovered substitutes war-of plastics, cork and glass. Others are of wood, grass and raffia and as old fashioned as Grecian sandals.

In Paris the clatter of woodensoled sabots resounds from Menilmontant to Montmartre and along 244 by Mrs. Cy Kellett and men's of the argument and general misthe boulevards to the most aristocratic quarters of the city. Durling the days of Louis XIV, Frenchmen wore them because they were cheap. Now they must wear them because they must—and they're not cheap. A pair of straw-topped sabots are tagged in a Rue Royale shop window at 400 French francs. In Germany experiments are being made with a tough type of straw braided into three strands for summer and six for winter. Some 40 yards of braid is needed . for one pair of shoes. They last about a year but need resoling frequently. They're comparatively cheap—a pair in a Friedrichsstrasse shop was marked at 10 German marks.

What leather there is in Italy also has been chiefly set aside for the army. Shoe factories have been ordered to combine their stocks with vulcanized fibre and synthetic materials.
