Building for the Future
It is said by many critics that Mack has now the best infield the game ever saw. All the players are young men, who have many years of playing before them in all probability. Yet to-day Mack is looking for more infielders, for he believes in planning years ahead. Death or accident, he says, might spoil his team at any time, or from some mysterious reason a great player might begin to "go back" it requires five years, in Mack's opinion, to build up again. So he does his building a brick at a time, and will never be caught absolutely unprepared for an emergency, or left in such a desperate position as Pittsburgh was last year when that team needed a good pitcher so desperately that it paid $22,500 for Marty O'Toole.

IRISH HORSEBREEDER
Captain Spender-Clay Starts Extensive Establishment

Captain Spender-Clay, Waldorf Astor's son-in-law, evidently does not share the Astor family's antipathy towards Ireland. Before his trip to India a few months ago he was in communication with the Irish Board of Agriculture with a view to promoting the breeding of steplechase horses that would ultimately be the basis of a breed of animals suitable for army purposes. To encourage the experiment he offered to place $50,000 at the disposal of the Board.

While the Agricultural Board has been looking around, considering the practicability of the proposal, the Captain in conjunction with his friend, Sir Gilbert Greenhalgh, has decided to start a breeding establishment, and has settled on one of the most pleasant and picturesque spots in the whole of Ireland—Mount Coote, near Kilmallock, in County Limerick. This is another reason for the pleasing reflection that while Irish landlords are deserting Ireland quite a number of American and English business men are taking their places, whose operations it is hoped, will have a different effect on the temper of the people and the national prosperity of the country, Captain Spender-Clay's experiences of the Irish horses were superior to any others for military purposes.

In the World of Sport

CHANCES FAVOR THE ATHLETES

Their Manager, Connie Mack, is One of the Cleanest and Wisest of Sports

If one were inclined to bet on the result of the world's championship series to be held six months from now he would expect the odds to be in favor of the Philadelphia Athletics, for it is conceded that Mack, the manager of this club, is one of the craftiest men in baseball, and that he has built up one of the most remarkable teams in the history of the game. Now that he has won his way to the top, Mack is quite willing to take the outside world into his confidence and tell how to make a winning ball team. After all, there are only two ways. One is to buy up the very best players in the world, irrespective of their cost, and trust to them to carry off the pennant. It is not on record that this method has been successful in recent years at least. Mack's way is to get promising young players and develop them. On his team of say 15 men who take their regular turn in the game through the season, it is doubtful if Mack has half a dozen "stars." They are all good players, but they are great players because they are working in perfect harmony as part of a machine.

Mack Likes College Players

Mack is a great believer in college players. As a rule, they are fast, and they are the first essential in the making of a first-class player. They have been taught to think, and in these days a thick-witted player is of little use on a first-class team. Most important of all, they are young, have developed no bad faults, and are amenable to discipline. A player who slowly makes his way up through the minor leagues and becomes a "star" is either a man who cannot be bought except at an expenditure of many thousands of dollars, or he is a man whose habits are fixed. His faults, if he has any faults, and there are not more faultless men among ball players than there are in other occupations, are established habits. Connie Mack does not want men with established faults. He is a sort of schoolmaster, and has his own curriculum. He has no use for post-graduates, as he says, for like other teachers, he believes that his own pedagogic methods are the best.

Clean Living and Temperance

Mack emphasizes the fact that without clean living and temperance a ball player cannot become a "top-notch" nor a regular member of a winning team. He mentions the case of one man, a brilliant player, who ate himself out of one of the major leagues, and he says that an investigation will show the men of the Philadelphia ball team to be more careful and abstemious in their habits than an equal number of young men drawn from any business or banking house in the country. Before the series with Chicago that decided the world's championship two years ago Mack called his men together and asked them to promise that for the two weeks of training and playing they would not take a drink. Every one promised, and kept his word. Throughout the season there is very little drinking, and even the men who are not teetotalers limit their indulgence to a bottle of beer a day.

Derby Day in Bermuda
Derby day is the big day in Bermuda, and furthermore it is a legal holiday. The Bermuda Derby is run in March, in connection with a half-dozen other races under the auspices of the Bermuda Hunt Club. Everybody goes to the Derby and it is considered the gala day of the season. The Malden Stakes is run off promptly at 12 o'clock. This is for horses that have never won a race in Bermuda, but as most of the entries are from North America this is not a serious restriction. At 12:30 o'clock a five-furlong pony race is scheduled, which is merely a prelude to the great event of the day. Between 1 and 2 o'clock the paddocks, lawns and boxes are turned into picture grounds. The distance for this race is one mile and the horses make their getaway directly in front of the grandstand. The horses are ridden by members of the Bermuda Hunt Club or by jockeys licensed by the Club.

Derby day is allowed, but the popular form of betting is through the Pari-mutuel, which is run by the club. After the Derby comes a race called the Shaft Stakes, which gives the old "rebels" a chance to show what they can do. Next comes a Galloway stake for horses 15 hands and under, and then the visitors' cup. There is nothing commercial in the atmosphere and the scene resembles a country fair or a big picnic more than anything else.

A ROUSING STRUGGLE

A Hard Game Between England and Scotland in Soccer Final

From the cabled reports it must have been a most exciting contest between Scotland and England for the International Soccer Championship, which resulted in a draw, the two countries, therefore holding the championship jointly for 1911 and 1912. The attendance was 150,000. There seems not to have been a dull moment and the huge crowd was kept in continuous excitement by the stirring efforts of the respective sides to gain the mastery. England appears to have been superior forward and this is what was expected owing to the five's knowledge of each other's play and individually all were stars. Scotland's attack was too much mixed up and individual instead of cohesive effort would be a feature of their play. It is worthy of note that Bobby Walker is mentioned as being the hero. This was the tenth time he had played for his country against England. The Scottish defence is credited with the draw and from this we may conclude that Brownlee, and Co., had more to do than Williamson, Crompton and Co. The following shows the winners of the international championship since 1884, which was the first year all the countries played each other.

Table with 2 columns: Year, Country. 1884-84 Scotland, 1884-85 Scotland, 1885-86 England, 1886-87 Scotland, 1887-88 England, 1889-90 Scotland, 1890-91 England, 1891-92 England, 1892-93 England, 1893-94 Scotland, 1894-95 England, 1895-96 Scotland, 1896-97 Scotland, 1897-98 England, 1898-99 England, 1899-00 Scotland, 1900-01 England, 1901-02 Scotland, 1902-03 England, 1903-04 Ireland, 1904-05 Scotland, 1904-05 England, 1905-06 England, 1905-07 Wales, 1907-08 Scotland, 1908-09 England, 1909-10 Scotland, 1910-11 England, 1911-12 England.

There is no question but that lovers of athletics prefer to entice over and support amateur sport, in its purity, as against professionalism, writes M. J. Shea in The Winnipeg Free Press. There is something in the atmosphere that surrounds the amateur that makes his efforts more strongly appeal to the enthusiast than the more finished article that the paid player is supposed to advance.
