EDITORIAL

A Working Brother . . .

There was a day when newspapermen were notorious for changing jobs almost as often as they changed underclothes. It was a peripatetic profession, so to speak, and the haphazard wanderings of those claiming it for their own suggested that they were laboring in the Fourth Dimension rather than in the Fourth Estate. It is not the most constant of professions now, but the average newspaperman's life with one employer is probably ten times longer than it was thirty-odd years ago.

It rarely happens, even in these times, that a good man can be persuaded to stay for long on a paper of small circulation—even at a fabulous salary if such were ever offered. It is the larger audience, not the salary, that attracts a good man and the easiest way of getting such an audience is to transfer to a big newspaper. Big in size and circulation.

Arthur Penny, editor of the Quebec Chronicle-Telegraph, is one of those rare exceptions who has found a large audience the hard way. He has made his audience a national one by the forcefulness of his editorials—while finding time, as well, to build up an excellent newspaper in other respects. Scarcely an editor in Canada but searches the exchanges to see what Mr. Penny has to say on this or that topic—and usually what Mr. Penny has to say is so well thought out and forceful that his editorial gets reprinted here, there, and everywhere. Result: Mr. Penny's average audience, instead of being limited to thousands, can be numbered in hundreds of thousands.

He is now celebrating his twenty-fifth year as editor first of the Quebec Chronicle and latterly of the Chronicle-Telegraph. During those twenty-five years he has built up for himself a position similar to that of William Allen White, editor of the Emporia Gazette, whose words count for more in the United States than the words, say, of a leader-writer on the New York Times. Unlike White, however, Penny, the man, has been little publicized; he has been content with the bushel of editorial anonymity as long as the light of his opinions shone clear. That they have shone clear is proved by the freedom with which they are quoted.

Holding Meetings In Public Houses

English Clergy Convinced That New Type of Mission Necessary

WARWICK, Eng., Dec. 10 (CP) — Clergy of four Warwickshire villages, Arrow, Bidford-on-Avon, Exhall and Salford Priors convinced the technique of the old-fashioned mission is out of date, have been visiting each other's parishes, calling at every house and holding meetings for all ages and types of parishioners. A successful feature was the "Brains Trust" meetings held in four public houses and a village hall.

The landlord of one public house told Rev. J. A. Thomson, vicar of Salford Priors, that ever since the meeting the conversation in the bar every night has been about religion.

KHAKI DERMATITIS

LONDON, Dec. 10 (CP) — James Dodds, known as the "Man who can't wear Khaki," has been honorably discharged from the Royal Marines. Able-bodied and fit, he developed chronic dermatitis after serving more than two years and doctors recommended his discharge.

BATHING AT HOME

PURLEY, Eng., Dec. 10 (CP)—People in this Surrey town took the holiday-at-home advice literally and Councillor F. T. Q. Mason reported he had seen as many as 15 people at one time bathing in an emergency water supply tank.
