The United States defenders battled desperately for hours against the landing parties which had evidently crossed from the mainland under cover of night. A communique from General Douglas MacArthur's headquarters in Australia said the landing had been on the northeast of the island.

The landing attack followed a day during which there had been no less than thirteen air bombings and five hours of artillery shelling designed evidently to smash shore defences With the fall of Corregidor went the outer islands of Manila Bay

President Franklin D. Roosevelt sent a message to the Cordefenders yesterday regidor praising them for their courage and endurance and describing the defenders as "a shining example of patriotic fortitude and self sacrifice."

Fighting continues on Mindanao, Cebu and Panay islands. In announcing the surrender of Corregidor, the War Department said that terms were being
