Chief of Imperial General Staff Is Doughty Fighter and An Ardent Sportsman

By RUSSELL LANDSTROM

LONDON, Feb. 27: (AP)—“You know,” said one long familiar with the mettle of Sir Alan Francis Brooke, “he used to smoke 40 or more cigarettes a day, beside several pipes of tobacco. Then he gave it up—just like that.”

“That,” was a finger-snapping gesture signifying that both vocabulary and imagination had failed in the presence of a staggering fact.

This decision, the informant continued, is a sample of the determined qualities of the new chief of the Imperial General Staff—highest service chief of all the British Empire's armed forces.

Sir Alan is an ardent sportsman, reputedly one of the 10 best shots in Great Britain, and a fisherman of the Isaak Walton school. The 58 year old chief of staff is known in the service as a brilliant teacher, with a liking for free discussion, both in and out of the army.

Several stories are told about his detestation of sloppy habits. A favorite one dates back to the First Great War when he was inspecting a base hospital which he found pretty much abandoned to dirt.

“Is this the World War or the Crimea War?” he demanded right off. The superintendent was summoned and was asked to give his name.

“I'm glad to hear it,” Brooke barked. “I thought you were going to say Florence Nightingale.”

Anxious to Fight

Last September Gen. Brooke, the commander in chief of the home forces of the United Kingdom, was reported as welcoming an attempted German invasion because of the opportunity it would give of “throwing the Nazis back in the sea.”

Sir Alan was born July 23, 1883, in Bagueres de Bigorre in Southern France, and was educated in a private school at Pau before entering the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich.

He served in France and Belgium during the First Great War with the Royal Artillery which he entered in 1902. A holder of the Distinguished Service Order, he was mentioned in dispatches on seven occasions in recognition of his distinguished services.

Artillery has been the chief interest of his military career, and, he has been responsible for notable advances in this branch of war science. The barrage map for directing artillery fire was his invention.

He won recognition for what has been termed masterful direction of the 2nd British Army Corps against Nazi mechanized forces in the Low Countries in 1940. Back from Flanders only a short while, he set out again for France, later escaping from St. Nazaire in a small boat. It was a tight squeeze.

Gen. Brooke is an outspoken exponent of modern strategy and bold innovation. He has warned from time to time that the possibility of a German invasion of Britain has not been eliminated.

The nation had it from no less authority than from Prime Minister Churchill that Brooke's gifts were extraordinary. Mr. Churchill asserted last February that he had the “greatest confidence in Sir Alan.”

Civilian Dress For Women In Old London Shows Little Military Influence

Written for The Canadian Press By BARBARA BRITON

LONDON, Feb. 27: (P)—Feminine coat styles have been only slightly influenced by the great variety of military topecoats seen in London. Women in uniform are apt to prefer gorgeous tweeds for off-duty wear and there is increasing popularity for the loose, raglan-sleeved coat with high, turndown collar.

One leading house of fashion has steered away from these military styles, while the designer of the new uniforms for the Auxiliary Territorial Service and the Women's Volunteer Service prefers to use plaids and herring-bones for its civilian models.

Tweed and Alpaca

The popular loose coats are of tweed, alpaca or camelhair and wool. One well-known maker has models in olive green, maroon or tan and the usual tones of natural. Dolman and raglan sleeves appear on most of these loose coats. Many have bee sleeves and there is less overlap in front but closer buttoning. Inset pockets on the slant take the place of the patch variety and turndown collars are more in evidence than the notched classic style.

Hats for these tweeds are necessarily simple and the old standby, the Tribby felt is a favorite in colors that match or harmonize with the tweeds. The hats are deep green, royal blue, red, deep gold and maroon.

One milliner has brought out several new felt hat models that can be folded into the pocket and yet be resurrected without a crease. Many of these are to be exported to Canada.

Hats and Coats

Other coat and hat designers pair-off felt hats with their tweeds, but the really feminine designer insists on the ornamental type of hat, held in place by a heavy net that takes in the back of the head.

Though hats are the only article of clothing that can be bought without coupons women are not extravagant in their purchases. They prefer the durable, easy-to-wear styles and the kerchief.

Mrs. Churchill, who makes no attempt to be an arbitrator of style but wears what she thinks most suitable and convenient, gave great impetus to the kerchief a year ago when she adopted it for wear while driving and travelling with the Prime Minister.

The kerchief is still popular for windy and rainy days.

Trappist Monk Is Desert Hero

Father Celsus Flinn's Daring Act Gave Action to British.

CAIRO, Feb. 27: (P)—A young Trappist monk who for ten years lived in seclusion at the Mount St. Bernard Monastery in Leicestershire, England, is one of the heroes of the Libyan campaign.

Father Celsus Flinn, chaplain with the field ambulance, was taken prisoner with other British troops by a German tank column. The monk escaped and despite enemy fire drove an army wagon across the desert to British headquarters.

His report resulted in British gunners smashing the enemy column and freeing the other prisoners.
