EQUALITY OF WOMEN

Still Many Inequities, British Leaders Say Should be With Home Guards in Defence

By DOUGLAS AMARON

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

LONDON, Oct. 15 (CP) — British women, working on the assumption that war provides them with a golden opportunity to prove they can be as valuable to the community as men, have begun a movement to secure equality with men when the peace comes.

It is still a modest campaign, unaccompanied by the suffragette methods of setting fire to post boxes and knocking off policemen's helmets, but it has the strength of millions of supporters convinced they can in time force the government's hand.

The women's movement had its birth in the Crimean War when, led by Florence Nightingale, middle-class women, for the first time, were allowed to work for the cause of their country. In the last war women acquitted themselves so well they no longer could be refused the vote. Now, in this war, the women say, final moves must be made to revolutionize their status and usher in the epoch of equality. Women behind the "equality" movement have drawn up a plan of attack on all the vulnerable points in the man-monopolized world.

Douglas Amaron

A typical clash is underway now between Sir Kingsley Wood, chancellor of the exchequer, and the Women's Guild of Empire, with a mailing membership of 50,000 women. "General" Flora Drummond, of suffragette fame, is controller-in-chief. Mrs. B. M. Young, Guild Secretary, wrote Sir Kingsley about the income tax "indignity" placed on married women because the post-war credit is returned to the husband, though part, or all, of it is earned by the wife.

Husband's Authority

Sir Kingsley explained that if certain formalities are gone through, the wife can have the credit re-issued in her name, but Mrs. Young answered that the re-issue can be made only if the husband gives his written authority. "It is disgraceful," said Mrs. Young, "that the government won't recognize us as women instead of as chattels."

Said E. P. Stacpoole, the Press Association's lobby correspondent: "Certainly the Guild women seem determined to abolish the notion of Schopenhauer, the philosopher, who insisted that all women in their hearts believe that men are intended to earn money so that women can spend it. But at present they are not prepared to go quite so far as to reverse this distum and suggest that women are intended to earn post-war credits so that men can spend them."

Dr. Edith Summerskill, a leader of the feminist movement, emphasized the importance of obliterating the conception of a wife as a "dependent."

"You must regard the housewife as a workers making a contribution to the community," she said. "At present every worker in the country earning less than £400 a year has health insurance—except the housewife. Until you give her all the benefits of other workers you will always have people who regard women as inferior in the labor market.

"... there is as much discrimination against women in this country as there is against negroes in America. It must go."

Women Sharpshooters

Dr. Summerskill's Women's Home Defence Corps, which the government hasn't yet recognized officially but which has recruits from such government departments as the Ministry of Information, has more than 20,000 members. These women and girls are ready to show their aim with a rifle is as true as a man's, and in competition with male formations, such as the auxiliary police, have proved their worth.

Their immediate demand is for admission to the Home Guard and some leading male commanding officers have expressed favorable views on this point to the War Office. It is possible that another "equality" milestone will soon be passed.

Women are striving too for more representation in Parliament — where at present they sit in the ratio of 13 to 602. Since the war dozens of men have been returned to the commons by acclamation—but no woman, which the latter claims is "prejudice." Now, the "Women for Westminster" Committee, under Miss Dorothy Evans, is training girls to be M.P.'s and town councillors. They learn how to speak, parliamentary procedure, economics, local government and so on. Conferences on the need for more women M.P.'s are to be held shortly in a number of English cities.

Another "equality" point on which the government may soon have to take action concerns compensation for women injured through war action. More than 100 members have signed a motion supporting equal treatment and when Mrs. Mavis Tate, M.P., led a huge delegation to Clement Attlee, the deputy prime minister promised the government's "careful consideration."

Two British women recently soared to new industrial "heigths" by getting jobs on cranes 100 feet above ground level. That, say the women, is symbolic of the heights to which their sex as a whole will rise when the war ends.

SPORT CHAT

One of this old world's oddities, the Society of One-Armed Golfers, held its annual two-day tourney in England and proved once again that absence of an arm is no deterrent to first class golf. George Jackson, for instance, made a 280-yard drive. He gets distance consistently and holds the long-drive title of the society. A field of 50 toured the Sudbury course and the Sir Ian Hamilton Trophy for disabled ex-servicemen went to G. L. Watson of Edinburgn with a gross of 87. Sandy Lewis of Saltcoats, Scotland, won the Kemsley Cup, for players injured other than in the war, with a gross 94, less a 20 handicap. Sandy plays with his left hand and thereby hangs a tale: The arm was injured in the Battle of Jutland and was useless ever after. A few years ago, Sandy, as a disabled service man, won the Hamilton cup. Later, the arm was severed in a railway accident, thereby making him eligible for the Kemsley competition. He says it was "sheer good luck" when he lost the arm outright because "it was no darn good anyway." With players from throughout Britain competing, the English team won the International match against Scotland, six games to one. The society was formed after a tournament conceived in 1931 by a man who lost an arm 11 days before the Armistice.

Baron Von Cramm, internationally known German tennis ace of pre-war years, has lost both feet as the result of war wounds, according to a report from the Nazi-held countries. He is one of six brothers in the Nazi armed forces. Von Cramm was convicted of "moral delinquencies" by a German court in 1938 and sent to jail for a year. The offence, however, didn't prevent his being accepted as a soldier soon after war began.

Another of the rare items of underground sport news from Europe has it that the last heard of Mlle. Jadwiga Jedrzejowska, Polands leading woman tennis player, she was working as a waitress in a small restaurant on the outskirts of Poland. Her family was said to be destitute. The report added that Jadwiga made herself more popular than ever when she snubbed Max Schmeling in this restaurant after he held out his hand to her. The previous time they met was at a joint dinner in their honor in New York. Even before the war Miss Jedrzejowska was popular with everyone—except newspaper typesetters. That name got them.

Rastus on H.M.S. Gorleston Has Many Experiences

A BRITISH PORT, Oct. 15: (CP)—"Kitten became airborne at 14:30" reads an entry in the deck log of H. M. Destroyer Gorleston. It happened this way: The kitten, "Rastus," boarded the destroyer at the height of an air raid and became ship's mascot. In harbor her favorite pastime was stalking seagulls on the fo'csle. The entry concerns the time Rastus was seen to leave the deck holding on to the leg of a large gull. Rastus fell off into the sea, swam ashore and returned aboard via the pier and gangway.
