In spite of all the machinations of science to destroy human life and property in warfare, it is the quality of man himself that will decide the issue of modern warfare, Commander A. H. Reed, naval officer in charge at Prince Rupert, suggested to the Prince Rupert Gyro Club yesterday. This reflection of Commander Reed's is worthy of thought. If man has become sofe, no quantity and no quality of machines in the final analysis can save him. And possibly the quality is a more important consideration than the quantity. We need the men of quality to FRENCH DETEST NAZI produce and to use the machines of war. Possibly we have been too prone to place the value of the machine before the value of the man. This, of course, brings up the question of morale, something that has not yet been tested in Canada such as it has been in Britain. Our testing time may yet come. We might as well determine ourselves that we must stand up without compromise. The machines of quality and quantity are essential. The same can indeed be said of the men.
