TO ANYOX

Dr. R. G. Large and Party Back Today From Trip to Former Smelter Town.

Dr. R. G. Large and party returned to port late this morning from a trip to Anyox aboard the nower yacht Soogwilis. The trip was made primarily for the purmaterial in the old recreation hall and gymnasium at the ghost smelter town might be of any use to the local community centre project. It was found that there was nothing left there that would be of much use in the Prince Rupert undertaking.

The party left here Friday evening and the Soogwilis ran into quite a dusting—bucking a northeast wind off the mouth of the Naas River northbound. Saturday night was cold at Anyox and ice had to be broken for about a quarter of a mile coming out of Woman Appealed to Prime Minister for War Workers' Transport and Got It.

TREDEGAR, Wales, Jan. 5: (2)-Mrs. William Wilson believes that hurry the thing to do is write the prime minister.

Mrs. Wilson was worried because her husband and other workers at an important war factory had frequently to wait for long periods after their work for transport. In some cases she found the inconveniences were causing unjustified domestic strife in homes where previously it was unknown.

She complained to the prime minister and within a few days she had an answer from No. 19 Downing street that her letter was being forwarded to the appropriate department.

Sailor Tells of How Navy League Ditty Bags Were Received on Ship at Vancouver.

VANCOUVER, Jan. 5 - The ship was very quiet on Christmas Day as it lay at the dock here. I went ashore on business and came back in the evening. The air was icy cold, the launch flung herself forwards over the waves. The evening sky, a paeon of blue and grey and black, was illuminated with stars. There was a smell of snow in the air. We reached the ship. A lantern hung like a beacon over the ladder as we climbed up. The gangway watchman had a grin you could stick a shovel in, across his wide face. "Hey, Frankie, look at your bunk." Nothing niore. I got across the iron frozen deck to the saloon. Inside was warmth, cigarette smoke, and laughter. The noise was deafenng, the floor a chaos of paper. On every bunk or seat was a ditty bag. With fingers stiff with the cold, I fumbled with the string. knife and cut it. I looked. A huge sweater, what Chocolates, sweets, a first aid set. The person who thought of that alone was a genius. A mouth organ, writing pad, a lovely razor set, soap, matches. Tobacco for dad ,cigarettes for me. A mysterious tin-Xmas pudding! then some cocoa, just the thing for a cold night on watch. And underneath a letter, faintly scented, saying "Merry Xmas, sailor boy. Please write." Signed "The Girls in the Curtain Department" and four names—and four kisses. Almost in Tears.

I looked up as the cabin boy, wearing an enormous brand new scarf, handed me a mug of tea. He was almost in tears for he was only 15. "Frank, look what I've got. Just what I want to see if there is dust under the bunks." Strapped forever to his waist was the biggest and shiniest new torch I've ever seen. Everyone of us had a ditty bag. Everyone on board the ship was remembered Kind hands all over Canada had knitted to keep us warm. Brains had worked over the problem of what we would like best and solved the problem beautifully. Money had Now steps are being taken to been spent without thought and we all had a sweet letter from someone on shore.
