Says Britain and Her Allies Have Superiority in Science And Engineering Foresight

"What is this idea of German invincibility? I see from various announcements that . . . this belief has now been destroyed. Destroyed? . . . What began it, and who on earth believed it? In the last war Germany won most preliminary battles, except Cambrai—and was then well and soundly beaten. I thought this war was largely a matter of science, production and engineering foresight? If this is true, it is for the Germans to worry, for they have accomplished very little in the world of invention, writes Prof. A. M. Low, vice-president of the Institute of Patentees, in the London Daily Sketch.

"They are definitely most unoriginal. They improve, alter and manufacture the products of other people's brains—like their worthy allies, the Japanese.

"When these inventions arrive back in England five years later, we say: "How ingenious are these German scientists!"

"Ingenious, indeed! It may be very wrong of us to neglect invention—but the man who conceived Stephenson's Rocket is far greater than the draughtsman who so arranges detail and labor that replica can be made at half the price.

Allied Contributions.

"Great Britain and the U.S.A. have accounted for most of the inventions which have benefitted mankind. All electrical machinery, from railways to hair-driers, is the result of Faraday's genius. Vacuum cleaners, television the Queen Bee, and the plastics which give us half our household goods—are all British.

"It was Sir John Dewar's research which showed Germany how they could corner a vacuum flash market.

"It was Sydney Gilchrist Thomas (not Tomersch) whose steel process was grabbed by Germans to build up their steel industry against us.

"I have looked through many Patent Office records—and in very few major inventions do I find the Winkelbaums or Schweinerpoffers. Jones, Brown, Robinson and Mac-something are far more prevalent.

"As far as science and invention are concerned, we certainly have the goods. However welcome they are, we do not even need refugees to teach us to be original.

Real Cultural.

"British students work and play in useful ways. Our 'culture' is not founded on an idiotic system of duelling, when men cut their faces with razors to show their courage.

"Who says invincibility? Even the snobbish few who must go to 'Bad-Hoffen' instead of Bognor as a remedy for over-eating have discovered that the British language is no bar to medical knowledge, and that mystery need not always be part of the cure. Many thousands owe their lives to insullin—to give a popular example; but Dr. Banting was not a German.

"Take artificial silk, canning or margarine (if you can get it!)—these are not German. Nor are streamlining, pneumatic tires, photo-electric cells, radio, the telephone or electric light.

"The German Patent Office reeks of copies and 'improvements.' It is too true that we have only just awakened to the lack of support which industry has given to inventors, who are, literally the backbone of all decent prosperity.

"In war—the torpedo, the airplane, submarine, cordite, tanks, and a host of flying gadgets are ours or our own allies' 'children.' So was the acoustic mine.

Japan Copies.

"Talkies and the mechanical harvester were not German. Nor were the spinning and other textile inventions which helped Japan to hit Lancashire below the belt.

"Why . . . Great Britain held all the motor racing records worth while until the German government backed up their factories while our racing men worked at their own expense.

"The war will be won by invention and science. The Germans are good but we are incomparably better. Stainless steel was ours: even the paper on which this is printed results from British invention.

"It is quite true that Germany can always produce mouse-traps cheaper than in England; I wonder how much their workmen are paid in useful money?

"For long there has been some childish fetish, fostered for reasons of self interest, that German universities are superb in every way.

Performing Seal.

"This is nonsense. They are thorough. They often encourage a type of research which is creeping in to our own country—research which is no more than the endless multiplication of little-wanted, so-called facts or a patient form of memory-training which no more indicates intellect than the work of a performing seal.

"Germany has produced some very great men. But they have had no Darwin, Faraday, Arkwright or Newton. Their machine tools are excellent—but they did not invent them.

"Our enemies did not invent direction-finding by radio or the Kelvin Tide Predictor. We still have the best of invention, science or engineering—and, if we use it to the full, there is no nation in the world that can tackle us for long at war or at trade. German invincibility, most certainly not."

Scottish Dance Much Enjoyed

Fine Affair Held Saturday Night By Oddfellows.

A very enjoyable old-time Scottish dance was held Saturday evening under the auspices of the Oddfellows' Lodge. Dancing started at 8:30 and continued until 12 o'clock.

Music was furnished by Mr. and Mrs. McGee, L. G. Hilder and H. Eyolfsen. William Davidson was master of ceremonies and kept the dancers going at a lively pace.

This and all future Oddfellows' Scottish dances are being run on a strictly invitation basis.
