Allied Offensive from North Africa Continues Without Let-up

ALLIED HEADQUARTERS IN NORTH AFRICA, April 2—A fierce Allied air offensive, which has been almost continuous for twenty-four hours, has featured the war in

After the heavy attack on Caglieri, Sardinia, in which enormous damage was done to enemy shipping and installations, the Allied bombers turned their attention to Sfax and did extensive damage including the air field, seven enemy planes being destroyed.

In their great raid on Sardinia, to which Marshal Erwin Rommel might look for sanctuary in an evacuation of Axis forces from Tunisia, United States flying fortresses sank or damaged thirty-two Axis ships and destroyed seventy-one enemy planes. Not a single one of , the American raiders was lost. Off Sardinia an Axis convoy was attacked and two merchantmen were sunk, two were left in a sinking

AUSTRALIA DISCOVERY

posit Adds to Those of Canada And Madagascar

MELBOURNE, April 2 (P) - An important discovery of phlogopite nica, believed to be of considerable size, is being developed in , Central Australia.

Phlogopite mica is brownished, is used in the manufacture of airplane spark plugs, and is regarded as an important strategic nineral. It has very high heat esistance. The world's other important mica deposits are in Canda and Madagascar. .

The Australian deposit was disovered about six months ago by G. A. Johansson, who has been in Central Australia many years. He thought it was ordinary muscovite nica, but when specimens were analysed, the Department of Supoly decided on large-scale development and sent up workers under Mr. J. Peart, a mining engineer, who had been working in Burma un Il the Japanese occupation.
