Winning the War With Food . . .

Dispatches from the Mediterranean area reveal orator's dream, but it is as navy. I hadn't seen him for Boston conditions which will have a very direct influence homelike as I can make it. two years. It's sure hot here New York upon food production in North America. They relate that, while the British, Canadian and American Last time I quotea a letter warm there too. (If you only troops are fighting the Italian and German armies, from Signalman Cliff Humford Allied ships are unloading at the island's ports food I got a shot across my bows for the civilian population in Sicily.

When the British and Americans landed in Africa very, very careful. Cliff says: "I and comp at Mrs. Keilback's). they found the Germans had robbed the civilian pop- guess it's about time I answered Goodbye now. One of the old ulation of everything except a bare sustenance. All surplus foods and agricultural production which could be used for munitions had been removed by the Nazis. Undoubtedly there is a similar situation in Sicily. As the invasion is extended, every island, and part of the continent of Europe freed from the heel of Hitler will be found to be in the same condition of starvation.

Every pound of food and bushel of grain which Canada can produce will be needed before the war is won. That statement has been made with variations in all parts of Canada by the press and various spokesmen. Having in view the remarkably quick disappearance of the "surplus" stocks which existed in the United States eighteen months ago, within the past week predictions have been made that Canada's immense surplus of wheat may disappear within twelve months, like snow before a chinook. If the' progress of freeing Europe proceeds at anything like the pace which has been followed in Africa and Sicily, there is good chance of this prediction coming true.

When the Nazis are rolled back across the countries they have occupied what now remains in these countries will be taken as they retreat. France, Belgium, Holland, Denmark and Norway have been robbed and looted of everything movable by the Germans, and the people of these countries are living under conditions of rationing which do not provide more than enough to sustain life. It will be the task of Britain, the United States and Canada and the South American republics within the community of the United Nations to provide the food without which the people of these ravaged lands will be unable to rebuild.

The existence of the immense stores of food which have been held by the peoples of the United Nations has not proved to be an inducement to the peoples of Axis countries to get out of the war, not up to the present. Probably this is because in the Axis-dominated countries the dictators have promised that they would soon control the world and the food would be captured and brought home. But as the course of the war has undergone a great change in the past six months, the dream of conquering the remaining free portion of the world and looting it of food must be fairly well dissipated by now. The end of the war and food in abundance must soon become a very attractive objective of all the peoples of Europe, including Germans and Italians. Abundant food for Sicily will help to get the message of hope to Italy.
