Landing Field Is Needed . . .

The use of commercial aircraft for travel, express and mail movement is making great and rapid like to help brighten up the be general. strides. The public is rapidly becoming air-minded. when the war is over and civilian travel comes back into its own this will undoubtedly become increasingly evident.

Political Front Important . . .

Mr. Churchill and Mr. Roosevelt appear to have proceeded at the Quebec conference on the conviction that the military fronts are more urgently important than the political fronts in this war. Allied victories have already changed if they have not completely solved several major political problems such as the status of the French Africa and Mussolini. However, political strategy must not be allowed to lag behind military planning.

The absence of Russia from Quebec suggests failure to achieve anything more than temporary organization for military action. If British-American forces get to Berlin before the Red Army, or vice versa, many political problems concerning the future of Europe would still be unsettled.

Moral forces, economic conditions and deep-lying social aspirations will in the long run shape Europe more litally than British-American military power momentarily applied to smash the Axis.

A stable peace may depend more on wise agreements with Russia on forward-looking recognition of democratic social movements in occupied countries and freerer trade arrangements.

Raising the Lafay ette...

In recent weeks the people of the North American continent and perhaps the people of France, if they have listened to the shortwave broadcasts, have followed with marked interest the raising of the U.S.S. Lafayette, formerly the French Line hyvnry liner Normandie, from the mud of the East River at New York. The vessel has now been raised until she has a list of approximately 35 degrees and reports state that the crucial part of the operation has been completed.

Taken over by the United States Government, after the fall of France, with the idea of converting her into a troop transport, the Normandie took fire and capsized at her pier when tons of water were pumped into the hull in an effort to extinguish a fire started by a workman's torch while fittings were being removed. The task of raising her has been one of the most difficult in history. That it is now nearing completion without the loss of a single life is a tribute to careful planning.

The plum for the week: goes to Bob Herrick, the American Red Cross representative at Port Edward, for the grand minstrel show he presented at the Capitol Theatre last Sunday night It sure was a rave. The Canadian Services lapped it up and yelled for more. It caught the rollicking lilt of "you all" south with a most competent interlocutor, versatile end men plus a handpicked chorus, ably supported by the dancers trained by the ever-obliging Mrs. Black. They dispensed fun and mirth for a good hour and a half. We understand that this show of shows will go the rounds of the camps in this area shortly so it will be a treat in store for both those who have and have not

He sure knows his stuff and, anyone hearing him, cannot but follow him-his enthusiasm is so infectious. Men of this nature are indeed rare birds and we are sure glad to know that the teaching of the technique of some of the most important phases of our defence lies in his hands.
