Revolution in Argentina . . .

The revolution or political coup in Argentina, which ever it might be fitting to call it, looks like another demonstration in favor of the Allied cause in the war. The ousted President Ramon Castillo was the last head of a western hemisphere government of any importance to retain relations with the Axis. Now he is gone before Argentinean revolutionaries who proclaim "Long Live Freedom, Long Live Democracy!" The fact that the coup was so speedily and bloodlessly accomplished indicates that Castillo, if he had not lost favor, had, at least, lost control.

It is rather difficult at this distance to appraise the political situation in Buenos Aires although it was apparent that Castillo, who is now deposed, was no particular friend of ours. Perhaps Argentina will now declare itself with the rest of the freedom-loving nations of the world. In any case a sympathizer of the Allies is the new president.

Rebirth of France . . .

The great diplomatic struggle which has reached its climax in the union of the Giraud and DeGaulle elements is an Allied triumph in that it was a French triumph, too. It took a great deal of delicacy, secrecy and above all, honesty, to wash away the suspicion of Allied aims and the sectional jealousies of the French colonial leaders and to cleanse the area for a rebuilding of French solidarity.

But it is done now and the voice of Giraud and De Gaulle is the voice of France, not only of the colonies but of the ravaged metropolitan area as well, and, because of it, it may be that Giraud will achieve his ambition of leading the army of liberation into his home town of Metz.

The return of the French naval squadron, which for the past three years has been immobilized at Alexandria, Egypt, to activity as a part of the Allied naval strength is another of the signs indicating rebirth of the unity necessary to the strength of fighting France. The tonnage and firepower of the nine vessels involved may never turn the tide of battle in favor of the Allies but the spirit which prompted their personnel to leave the comfort of internment in Alexandria to fight again is a factor which may.

A great part of the tragedy of France in the past three years was the fact that, following their defeat, Frenchmen thought themselves vastly alone. In their misery, it seemed, even their former friends had forsaken them. The events at Oran and Dakar in 1940 strengthened this unhappy belief. And, finding themselves friendless among nations, the leaders of the scattered French colonial pockets employed a subtle strategy for survival, based, paradoxically, on the strength of their own disunity. The principle of their policy was that, as long as they remained disorganized and, therefore, harmless, they were diplomatically safe from Allied disturbance as well as being for the greater part geographically safe from Axis despoilment. This policy was somewhat modified in North Africa, owing to the closeness of Axis strength, but it was basically the same.

It is doubtful if in these three stifling years there has been a Frenchman who would not have fought to restore the integrity of his homeland. But outside the DeGaulle forces there were not many who would believe that to fight with the Allies was to fight for France.

 The Hostess

The new kitten I said I wouldn't have until the autumn has arrived and taken possession of our hearts. He came from Port Edward and I think he must be a brother to the one Johnny Kuntz offered me the other night. The boys who brought him to say his name is "Sarge" but I wanted "Victory" so we have compromised and his full title is "Sergeant Victory." He's coal black and the spunkiest little fellow. You'd think he had been here all his life. Just now he's asleep underneath the canteen counter.

Jimmy Corlette, one of the Y. M. C. A. supervisors at an Alaskan post, and Don McGee, who is stationed at Bella Bella and holds the Y fort there on his own, blew into town yesterday to attend a sports meeting. It was nice seeing them again and we all managed to have a pow-wow at Ken Harding's in celebration of—well, in celebration of something or other.

Each Friday night we hold a bingo up here and each Friday night Cpl. Bazan of the Veterans' Guard runs it for us and so far each Friday night I have forgotten to thank him for his yeoman services. So, thanks very much, sir!

People play darts so badly. The majority think the idea is to stand as far away from the board as possible and hurl the darts with the same strength and fury that David used when working his slingshot on old Goliath. This method is best used in a javelin throwing contest and is very conducive of murder, especially if the unintentional victim crosses the path in front of a dart in action. The real technique is to stand nine feet away from the board and aim surely but gently with a quick wrist movement. In that way people in the immediate vicinity of the game are not in danger of their lives.

Well we are losing a real old timer when Cpl. "Pop" Robison of the R. C. A. M. C. leaves us in the near future. He's been here two years now. Good luck to him!

P.T. SPRING TEA-SALE

Enjoyable and Successful Affair Yesterday Afternoon at Odd-fellows' Hall

The Prince Rupert Parent-Teachers' Association held its annual spring tea and entertainment by the school children yesterday afternoon in the Oddfellows' Hall. The gathering, although well attended, was not as large as previous years owing to many of the patrons being engaged in war work. Mrs. G. R. S. Blackaby, the general convener, addressed the audience as also did Mrs. George A. Hill.

The program was as follows: King Edward School—Folk dancing and nursery rhymes by Grade I. flag drill by Grade II. Seal Cove School—Folk dances by Grades I, II and III. Borden Street School—Patriotic playlet, "Canada Our Homeland," by pupils from Grades IV, V, and VI. Booth Memorial School—Piano solo by Pat McClymont, piano duet by Gwen McRae and Mary Adcock, display of dancing by other High School girls, with Mrs. J. S. Black as pianist.

The tempting home cooking display was quickly bought up. Mrs. A. Dybhavn held the winning ticket on the raffle. Those working on committees with Mrs. G. R. S. Blackaby were:

NEWSPAPER FILM HERE

Adventure, comedy, action and romance make up the amusing film, "You Can't Escape Forever," which is coming next Monday and Tuesday to the Capitol Theatre. Brenda Marshall and George Brent are the stars.

The story deals with a newspaper editor's chagrin when he has to take over the love-lorn column because he allows his sense of a good news story to run away with his better judgment. Brent plays the role of the editor and Brenda that of a sob-sister whose faint heart gets her into a similar predicament. After some clever and amusing manipulations they trap a group of racketeers and cop one of the biggest scoops in their newspaper's history.

Program—Mrs. George A. Hill. Flower display—Mrs. R. M. Winslow. Home cooking—Mrs. J. Durran, Mrs. R. Webber, Mrs. T. J. Boulter, Kitchen—Mrs. M. Braun. Tea tables—Mrs. Gunnar Anderson, Mrs. J. N. Forman, Mrs. M. J. Saunders, Mrs. J. W. Eastwood, Mrs. E. W. Becker, Mrs. Dan Larsen. Refreshments—Mrs. George Howe. Pouring tea—Miss A. E. Mercer, Miss K. MacKay. Cashiers and raffle—Mrs. A. L. Haines, Mrs. S. R. Donaldson.
