From our standpoint as a newspaper we cannot world. help but stress Mr. Syer's comment regarding advertising, the elimination of which he suggested would be "false" economy. "Keep your name before the public even if you have nothing to sell," Mr. Syer counselled. It was an interesting parallel which the speaker drew of advertising being to business like an engine was to the train-cut off the engine and the train gradually stop. We often have counselled along these lines ourselves. It is gratifying to have an avowed advocate of simplification and economy in wartime business propound the same theory. It is but natural that we in the advertising business should be tempted to draw special attention to the fact.

Intolerable Action . . .

The action of the mine workers is "intolerable." declares President Roosevelt in commenting upon the recurring strike in the collieries of the United States. This is sufficient and simple commentary on that tie-up. Persisted in, the only answer to such tieups would be drastic government action with results to the parties concerned which might not be nearly as favorable as they now enjoy. To precipitate strikes in the essential war industries or in any line of useful endeavour these days involves a serious responsibility and such tie-ups, to be justifiable, must have basis in the most extreme of provocation.
