go active should at least be properly prepared to defend their homes against attack. To be so prepared it is necessary to be trained.

Many local men have already accepted it as their duty and responsibility to join up with the reserve. There are many others who have hesitated about doing so and are not yet in. To these the appeal is particularly directed at this time.

There may be campaigns and drives to get men into the reserve but possibly the most effective persuasion may come from one's own sense of duty and responsibility.

One thing certain is that any man who is reasonably fit would be able to do a more useful and intelligent job in defence of his home should emergency arise by having the necessary training and organization that the reserve offers.

There should be little difficulty next week in the necessary one hundred good men being obtained.

Canada Needs Canadians . . .

Prime Minister King is of course giving good advice when he warns against the dangers of using our energies now in wrestling with the problems of the post-war period. It is obvious that if we do not concentrate strongly on the war there may not be any post-war period to worry about for some time to come. However, it is natural for us to want to have some sort of goal. After nearly thirty years of buffetings in war and booms and depressions and more war, these generations of Canadians cannot be kept from trying to find some solid principle of assurance.

Notice is hereby given that men employed in certain specified lines of civilian employment, who are in age and marital classes already designated under National Selective Service Mobilization Regulations, must report for interview not later than June 15th, 1943, to an Employment and Selective Service Office.

One principle we can be sure about is that Canada's greatest post-war need is going to be Canadians. Where they will come from and how we shall get them here and insert them into our economy with a minimum of friction are items that we shall have to think about very hard. Greatly adding to our population while maintaining the identity of our country will take more skill than we have so far shown, but the decision that our population will increase is not going to need a large amount of thinking, for that decision has been made for us by the fact that we are about twelve million people thinly occupying a vast area of tremendous resources. We are like a man driving alone through the rush-hour crowds in a sevenpassenger automobile; if there isn't room on the street cars, somebody may ask us for a ride; and if is a rainy day in a tough neighborhood and we are stopped by a red light, several strong-looking fellows may simply open our doors and climb inside.

That is why Canada needs a good many more friendly strong people to ride in the car and discourage others from taking it away from us.

It's interesting to know when reading the Daily News that the people of the whole district are doing the same
