Waterfront Whiffs

Local Man in Fisheries Commission—
Plight of Eb Ratchford in North—
Herring Run Virtual Failure

An announcement of outstanding interest to waterfront and fisheries was that this week concerning the appointment of G. W. Nickerson as a member of the International Fisheries Commission in succession to L. W. Patmore, K.C., resigned. It was gratifying that to fill the position a Prince Rupert man should have been appointed. Since Prince Rupert, despite the loss of some of the fleet as far as winter quarters are concerned, is still the operating headquarters of the Canadian Pacific halibut fleet, it is quite fitting that a citizen of this port should have been named. As far as Mr. Nickerson is concerned one thing that all are agreed upon is that the interests of this port and its operator will always be kept to the fore—which is quite as it should be.

Those who know the district around Cordova, Alaska, out of which port Lindsay (Eb) Ratchford, formerly of this city, is missing since February 4 while on a crab packing trip believe there may still be a chance of his still being safe, no matter how hopeless the position may seem after the lapse of time. Eb, who was a brother of Joe Ratchford of Cow Bay and who had plenty of friends here from the pioneer days, was last seen at Johnson Bar, near Cordova, aboard his seineboat type packer Jacqueline which was swinging at anchor. The vessel previously had, apparently, lost power and started drifting, with anchor dragging, before a strong north wind. The sea was quite rough and the vessel was obviously not under control. Due to a misunderstanding, aid was not immediately sent out. A bad feature of the whole affair is that there was a good deal of jammed slush ice. The Governor of Alaska sent word that no expense need be spared in the search but there was difficulty in getting aircraft which might have helped. The missing man had planned on leaving that part of Alaska this spring and moving south, possibly back to Prince Rupert. He went to school here in the early days and, after having been engaged in plumbing for a time, finally went fishing and for the last twenty years he had been a fisherman.

Commercial fishing of herring closed at the middle of this week in this area after the worst season on record. The only catch made was some 1,000 tons around Laredo Inlet which was divided between the B.C. Packers, Canadian Fishing Co. and Nelson Bros. which had packers on the job. The herring was now in spawn but it is still permissible to take them for bait purposes and it is hoped that this may be obtained in a run which usually develops in the vicinity of Butler's Cove or Jap Inlet around the end of this month.

Each year for nearly two decades, the Dominion fisheries department has sent a killer expedition to the sealion rookeries of Queen Charlotte Sound waters and slaughtered sealions. Now another venture is to be undertaken against the deepsea pirates of the Pacific. This time it is a private enterprise against sharks—a sort of buccaneering raid. Salmon canneries are planning on wiping out large numbers of the great basking sharks that frequent Rivers Inlet during the salmon seining period. These great brutes, each weighing tons, and 30 and more feet long, have in the past caused serious damage to the nets of the thousands of fishermen who congregate there. The sharks lie on the water and go through the nets. Their rough skins and immense strength cut and tear the seines to tatters. This year, starting a fortnight before the season opens, it is planned to send a punitive expedition against the sharks. It will be manned by men with rifles, and it will have boats with steel-shod bows and good speed. These boats will ram and slash the sharks. Death may come then to the sharks so attacked. The blood of slaughtered sharks is expected to drive others away, as it has done in the past. The basking sharks are entirely unlike minkiller sharks who tear wounded pails to bits, but quite like dogfish who also are said to flee waters bloodied by the life fluid of their own people. That is why old-time fishermen on the B.C. Coast used always to slash a dogfish open before throwing it back into the ocean. Of course the modern fisherman now takes the dogfish liver because it has vitamin content and money value.
