Action Not Promises . . .

British Columbia's experiment in Coalition government has justified itself, says the Victoria Times. The administration presided over by Mr. Hart emerged from its second session with no impairment of its reputation among the people of the province who are taking the long-term view of the war's implications. It is true that two by-elections have reduced its strength in the Legislature. These temporary reverses need not be taken as the shadow of coming events. But the Premier and his colleagues should recognize that the electors are not especially interested in the achievements of the past; they require visible assurance that promises are being implemented by action of a progressive character. They view the record to which the government points with pardonable pride as justification for bolder steps into the future. This is the demand of the hour.

The people of the province have observed Mr. Hart's readiness to branch out on programs calculated to meet the more pressing problems which the aftermath of the war will present. They have not forgotten the warm reception given to the Premier's first move (a rehabilitation act nearly two years ago) to anticipate some of the complexities of reconstruction and rehabilitation in British Columbia.

The sequel to that measure was the appointment of a Postwar Rehabilitation Council. Its exhaustive labors produced the Perry Report—a document which ranks highly among works of its kind. So far, however, most of the proposals publicized are dependent upon financial assistance from the Dominion government—which eventually should be forthcoming. But what is the province doing in the realm in which the Coalition ministry has full jurisdiction? We do not ask the question in critical vein; it is asked in recognition of the fact that many British Columbians want action now.

One of the important prerequisites obviously is the creation of a Department of Reconstruction. Such an agency of government could, among other things, deal with our own resources—say where they are, what they are, and how they can be profitably utilized. The province should be defined into areas in order that practical schemes may be ready for the development of each region—such as the planning of towns and villages and their concomitant expansion as full advantage is taken of the potentialities of the neighborhood concerned. Another urgent task which a Department of Reconstruction could undertake would be an intelligent housing survey, taking into consideration the needs of every community, whether small or large.

The cabinet is aware that the Perry Report has many recommendations whose adoption need not wait on the authorities at Ottawa. The government nevertheless might, without delay, initiate a conference with the federal administration to discover the basic national plan for co-operative financing. Above all, however, Mr. Hart and his colleagues should understand the pressing need for speed. And as an instrument of provincial policy, rehabilitation fact-finding machinery was the Premier's own creation; his three-party council has done an excellent job.

LEAD IS IMPROVED

NEW YORK, August 14 (AP)—New York Yankees shut out St. Louis Browns by a score of four to nothing yesterday and their margin of leadership in the American League remained at nine-and-a-half games. The Washington Senators, by defeating the Detroit Tigers, took over the runner-up position from the Detroiters. Only one game behind the Senators, Chicago White Sox and Cleveland Indians are all in a virtual tie for third place.

Only one game was played in the National League and in this the Boston Bees won over the Chicago Cubs to oust them from sixth place.

Yesterday's Big League scores:

Three runnings were required to decide a race at the Northern Jockey Club in New South Wales, Australia, 47 years ago. Yellow Plush, Tom and Syndicate ran a triple heat, and Tom and Yellow Plush again came in together in the second running. The third time, Tom came in ahead by a nose.

James J. Jeffries retained his world's heavyweight boxing title with a 10-round decision over James J. Corbett 40 years ago last night. Jeffries, who had been Corbett's sparring partner in 1897, lost his title to Jack Johnson, first negro titleholder, in 1910 after almost five years of idleness.

Jockey Joe Dyer, leading rider on Quebec circuit tracks, showed peak form four years ago today by bringing home a trio of winners. Dyer had mounts in each of seven races, running third in two and fourth and fifth in the others.
