We who died... on the beaches of Dunkirk and Dieppe, on the desert sands of Africa, in Hong Kong and Singapore... from our resting places in ocean deeps or alien earth, we call to you.

We who died, Salute you

We did not ask to die. We were young, we wanted to live. After we left you, we remembered all the little things that made up living-the girls we used to dance with, robins building nests in Spring, mother knitting on the porch, the good smell of Sunday dinner in the oven-the blessedness of peace. We who died for peace ask only that you realize to the full its beauty and its worth. For, if you do, then you will finish our task for us. No matter what it costs in effort or self-denial, bring home the sooner those who live ... that they may have what we have given up. That is all we ask of you, Canada
