ONE YEAR AFTER

ONE YEAR AGO TODAY Japan U surrendered and World War II came to an end as far as the fighting was concerned. The defeat of the Axis powers—first Italy, then Germany and last Japan-had been completed. Their threat for the time being at least had been removed.

Unfortunately in the year that has passed other issues have arisen which today find the world in what seems almost as great a state of unrest and antagonism as existed even during the war. The settlement of the peace—and it must be remembered that the world still is only in state of truce-seems as obscure and difficult as was winning the war. Certainly the difficulties that beset it are more complex.

The hope lies in the elimination of excessive imperialisms and the adoption of goodwill nation between nation and individual between individual, each satisfied with the assurance of comfortable security without position of domination and agres-

WHO WANTS TO FIGHT?

THE WORLD is still fraught with the threats of war but possibly a lot of it is merely shadow boxing. Russia is playing a bold game as she continues to be the one nation which the most of us with inferiority complex fear to be a danger to us. Undoubtedly Russia wants war no more than we do but she is playing a bolder game than the western nations. She knows that we do not want war and would do almost anything to avoid it. Therefore, the Soviet sets her aims high and insists upon them obstinately. She knows she will get no more than she asks for. So unpleasantly and without any pretence about being diplomatic, she insists on this and demands that. She is playing a great poker game and we are timid about calling her. Some fine day she will be called. Possibly, the sooner our side gets its back up and does some real calling, the sooner will we be able to get down to the serious business of settling the problems which beset the way

ONE OF THE MOST prolific and V versatile of modern British authors, the late Herbert George Wells, dead in London after suffering with diabetes for years, was credited with having influenced the thought of his country as much as any writer of his generation.

Early in life, Mr. Wells showed a particular aptitude for science, was educated along those lines and won high honors when he was graduated with his bachelor's degree from the Royal College of Science. His passion for science and his belief that in it, and in the methods of thought which it induces, lay the salvation of the world never left him and colored a great deal of his

It was, indeed, as a writer of scientific romances that Mr. Wells first made his name as a novelist, his "The Time Machine," published in 1895, having been hailed as a masterpiece of its kind. From that year new books from his pen appeared with amazing rapidity. He wrote other scientific works, but it became gradually more and more apparent that his future fame would rest upon talents of quite a different naturehis ability in portraying the incidents, humor and intrinsic romance of English middle-class life.

That gift of the author's was foreshadowed in his "Love and Mr. Lewisham," in 1900 and displayed to a pronounced degree in "Kipps" five years later.

It is to "Kipps" and two other books in somewhat similar vein, "Tono Bungay," 1908, and "The History of Mr. Polly," 1910, that the majority of English critics agree in looking for the finest flowering of Mr. Well's talent; and it is on those, they believe, that his chances of passing into the national literature of the country must rest.

As late as a month ago Wells was last in the limelight when he unloosed an attack on the British monarch in a question as to whether the Royal House was involved in large sums of money which Musso-British Fascist.
