Mission to India

The mission of three United Kingdom cabinet ministers — Lord Pethick-Lawrence, the Secretary of State for India, Sir Stafford Cripps and Mr. Alexander — is unmistakable evidence of the good wishes of all parts of Britain for their success. The purpose of the mission is to assist the Viceroy in his consultations with the Indian leaders on establishing the machinery for decidinging India's future form of government. In thus assisting in the final phase of India's progress towards self-government, the mission will, as Prime Minister Attlee points out, be given as free a hand as possible. Although there will undoubtedly be matters requiring reference back to the Cabinet in London, the reason for sending three members of the United Kingdom Cabinet was to secure the presence of responsible persons able to take a decision on the spot.

The British government has done great work in India. "We have united India," said Mr. Attlee, "and given her that sense of nationality she has lacked over previous centuries. She has learned from us the principles of democracy and justice. When Indians attack our own rule, they base their attack, not on Indian principles, but on the basis of standards derived from Britain."

India has had a splendid war record. Having twice in the past twenty-five years played her part in the defeat of tyranny "is it any wonder," asked Mr. Attlee, "that India claims freedom to decide her destiny?" Her future constitution and her place in the world are for India to decide, and in this, said the Prime Minister, "we seek the utmost co-operation of all the Indian lead-

While expressing his hope that the Indian people would remain in the British Commonwealth "a free association of free peoples" and pointing out that no great nation can today stand apart from what is happening in the world at large, Mr. Attlee also declared that if India elects for independence she has the right to do so, and it would be for Britain to make the transition as smooth and easy as possible. Whatever the terms of the eventual treaty with India, Mr. Attlee made it clear that Britain will seek no advantage that would entail disadvantage for India.

The Highway Run-around

Evidently the Canadian National Railways is the fly in the ointment as far as the question of settling final ownership of the Prince Rupert Highway between Dominion and province is concerned. The federal government has offered the road to the province which is willing to accept but not until the question is settled of the standing of several miles of the road which runs on railway right-of-way alongside the track. Therefore, it is more or less of a technicality which holds the whole matter up, a technicality which might prove a troublesome one if an obstinate attitude should be persisted in by each or any of the parties concerned. But, if a conciliatory attitude is adopted, there should be little difficulty in getting the matter settled once and for all.

Meanwhile we who would like to see the whole question straightened out and the road employed to the fullest extent possible in peacetime function feel we are still being given the run-around and are getting tired

The fact of the matter is that we are just about where we started as far as the settling of the ownership of the road is concerned. At least one satisfactory thing, is the assurance of the province that, meantime, it will assume the responsibility of maintenance as far as the equipment at its disposal will permit. If it had wanted to be really arbitary it need not even have gone this far.
