
Dinny Pail, the young Australian, stated by a world tennis authority as "the most complete player I have ever seen," figured in an unusual incident at Surbiton in England. He walked off the court after being within one point of winning his match in the third round of the Surrey singles championship. He beckoned to his opponent, a former junior champion, made his apologies and defaulted the game. He explained that he had played the game because he did not want to disappoint the spectators, but that he took the unusual action as a protest against the state of the ground. It was not giving him a fair chance to get good practice for the championship at Wimbledon. Pail is said to "have every stroke and to be a born strategist."

In an amateur Anglo-American boxing show in London recently the English team won from the fancied American team by five events to three. England won the flyweight. bantam, light, welter, and middle-weight fights. The feature was the knock-out in the first round of the American amateur! middle-weight champion in less than two minutes. The winner was a British sailor, Randolph Turpin, a mulatto, son of an English father from British Psychic Oysters-Guiana and a white mother. His father died from the effects of Won Sweepstake being gassed in the First World Navy.
