WINNINGTON-INGRAM

REV. A. F. WINNINGTON-INGRAM held the see of London, the third highest office in the Anglican hierarchy, ranking next after the Archbishoprics of Canterbury and York, for the longest time since the 17th century.

Although Bishop Ingram was an out-and-out High Churchman he endeavored always to be fair between different schools of thought in the bestowal of the considerable amount of patronage which his office yielded him.

Dr. Ingram made no pretension to erudition. This deficiency of high scholarship caused not a few churchmen of influence to view his appointment to the great see of London with some misgiving. Of his boundless feelings of charity towards men of all creeds and classes, however, there was never any doubt. Indeed, in his relations with certain of his clergy he was sometimes accused of being not merely charitable but altogether too easy-going, and the lack of discipline in the great unwieldy diocese of London often caused a wagging of heads.

On certain points, however, he was uncompromising. Despite his obvious leaning to the "Catholic" school of Anglicanism, his Lordship's addresses were generally of the simplest and most homely character.

APPRENTICESHIP

APPRENTICESHIP is education in a trade. The right of any boy or girl to learn or engage in any trade or profession for which he or she can qualify, is a fundamental right to education which must be ensured in any democracy.

Canadian boys and girls are being denied education in some trades by union agreements which prevent an employer from training more apprentices than the union restrictions permit. In some cases industry itself is not encouraging apprenticeship. Unions have monopoly of labor in the industry and the employers a monopoly of trade. Industrial peace has been purchased at the price of inalienable rights and progress.

Returning men and women are prohibited from learning trades by citizens who have assumed functions abdicated by the educational authorities.

There should be no permitting of conspiring to prevent others from learning, or engaging in, any trade. It is an offence for an employer to attempt to dissuade an employee from joining a union.

The only democratic test that can and willing to train as many apprentices as they can employ economically. Where industry cannot offer opportunity to learn, the schools should provide instruction.

Collective bargaining may be essential in modern industry but the collective suppression of educational rights is an intolerable privilege that should be removed at once, to permit Canadian youths to build futures of their choosing.

Justice, is the value of the work produced. Employers should be free to be applied to the work of an appren-

SAVE THE CHILDREN

MATTHEW H. HALTON, Canadian journalist, in an impressive message from Germany prepared for the Save the Children Fund (Canadian Committee) writes: "Never before in Europe's long history of blood and tears have so many children been doomed and disinherited from love in the sun as there are today. Of the dead and murdered we need not speak—of the thousands killed by the bombs or exterminated by the Nazis in their mass exterminations—of the tens of thousands who died of starvation, and the scores of thousands who were born who never caught the first breath of life because of prenatal starvation—of these we need not speak. But—of another legion of children we do speak—and must act. The vast legion of children in Europe, who at this moment, now, are friendless, or orphans, or dispossessed, or disinherited or stateless, or homeless or diseased, or starving—and these are to be found in their several millions all the way from the Baltic to the Isles of Greece. For these children there is still hope—if the parents of more fortunate ones will act in time. That means today.

"Here in Germany I am among these children. I have visited many of them, and I say that pity herself could not measure a child's suffering in our time. The worst thing of course is hunger. Have you ever seen a starving child? The rickety legs, and the bloated bellies are appalling enough, the pasty cadaverous faces and the burning eyes are worse still. But, there is something else—every so often there is a look of cunning which distorts the little faces more than hunger or pain. The starving child is the one who learns to lie and steal and betray—to do anything for a bite of food. Many European children have learned everything there is to learn in the lore of iniquity. From the child gangsters in the rubble of Warsaw and the Ruhr to the child prostitutes of fifty towns—yes hunger is the worst thing. In Vienna for example, of every thousand babies born, nearly three hundred die at birth, because their hungry mothers cannot nourish them in the womb. Thus Europe loses her future.

"Besides these, there are all the other children, homeless and parentless. In France alone, there are nearly half a million children whose parents went into German bondage and never came back. In a large camp in Germany, I was among imported women workers, who had born children to their German masters, children now without a father or a home. In Frankfurt I saw 400 motherless, fatherless, Jewish children in one party—to be taken to Palestine for adoption. They now had a hope after years of nameless terror—but others have nothing. Millions of children in this grim continent have been broken to every known misery."

TOTEMS WILL BE RESTORED

Charles Dudoward to Carry Out Work for City and Public Relations Council

The city's faded and decaying totem poles are to be restored to their original native coloration and physical soundness this summer by Charles Dudoward, Port Simpson native who has agreed to make the 11 totems "OK and in Indian fashion."

Speaking before city council last night, Mr. Dudoward said that he was still prepared to undertake an offer to replace decaying parts of the poles with sound wood, recarve damaged figures, and repaint the poles for $700. He stipulates that the city put up the scaffolding.

Major tourist attractions, even in their present dilapidated condition, the poles have been under the eye of city council for a recondition job for the last three years. Individuals and organizations have continually urged that they be restored.

A second offer by an unnamed native to recondition the poles at a cost of $25 each was turned down in favor of Mr. Dudoward's offer. Mr. Dudoward has agreed to finish the poles with a coat of boiled linseed oil and two coats of paint in colors similar to the original native dyes which colored them in their original Queen Charlotte Islands settings. The work will begin "as soon as possible."

Mr. Dudoward recommended that all the poles should be covered at the back by thin sheet metal similar to that which covers two of the poles, to protect the backs from the ravages of weather. He also recommended that they be painted once every five or six years.

The poles are said to be among the last of the really magnificent Queen Charlotte Islands totems and have been a high point of tourist interest since they were installed in Fraser Park and near the city hall by Commissioner W. J. Alder more than 10 years ago.

Mayor Daggett told city council last night that the cost of restoring the totems would be considered the city's contribution to the Prince Rupert Publicity Council to which the city has pledged financial support.

What City Council Did

Council approved an application by Cambrai Chapter I.O. D.E. to hold a tag day on August 16.

Council approved the creation of a special committee consisting of the city engineer purchasing agent and the Mayor to make the necessary purchases for the Pioneers' Home.

An application by Fred Scadden to erect four billboard panels on vacant downtown lots was granted by city council. The aldermen, however expressed themselves as desiring to have it remembered that erection of such signs was subject to the approval of council and could not be done solely on the approval of the building inspector as is the case of other construction.

They urge the driving police slogan, "Check your car—Check your driving."

United Canada

300 Years Ago
CALVERT United Two Continents

IN 1622 CALVERT, famous English statesman and Secretary of State to King James I, helped to unite the Old World and the New. Founder of colonies in Newfoundland and Maryland, Calvert's ideals of unity did much to foster understanding and friendship between two great continents.

Man of Vision, Calvert, early in the 17th century, said, "Preserve unity... prepare for the future"... and he set the example by his own actions.

Calvert's ideals of unity have been shared by all men of vision since Calvert's time. Today... let each of us be a man of vision... let us work earnestly for a united Canada.

Upon unity of purpose depends the full measure of our stature as a nation. There is only one Canada for clear-headed Canadians.
