Prices for tickets and seating dates, are being uncovered. accommodation varied from $277 for a loggia box of eight tickets to $2 for admission to a seat in the balcony, and proceeds went to the three principal charities of the textile industry.

The Albert Hali scene was televised for the first time and to light the largest interior ever televised 350 kliowatts of light were required, a battery of arc lamps throwing light from the top gallery.

The ball itself was broadcast in the evening television program. but for the midnight fashion parade a preview was shot in the basement of the hall, where a studio was installed.

Fashion houses were left with an acute shortage of mannequins during the week of the ball, as nearly every "named" model was kept busy with rehearsals for some days before
