A General Speaks...

receiv social OR THIRTY YEARS a fighting man who attained to the highest Army ments rank and distinction and is, therefore, well qualified to speak and advise, Major-General G. R. Pearkes, V.C., M.P., while hopeful that the young United Nations organization will achieve its primary objective of maintaining and permanent world peace, suggested in an address here that the certainty of Mrs. such peace is by no means assured as yet and that, in any possible combina-Kerr tion of conflict that would bring about World War III, Canada would be a Mr. chief battleground and prize. In view of the terrific new scientific develop-Mrs ment of the instruments of destruction and the annihilation of distance by Olso, the new powers of aerial propulsion, such a war would be one of utter sur-Mr. prise and quick destruction, the General said. The point was that there would be no chance for preparation of defences after conflict became imminent. Mrs. The General correctly enough suggested that Canada's geographical posi-Miss tion in the new world of today made it highly advisable that she should Dun be looking without delay to her defences against attack. Her natural de-How fences of distance and inaccessability were no longer effective. She was vulnerable from every quarter.

Here in Prince Rupert, the strategic position of which had been amply demonstrated in the last war, the General who had general command of Pacific Coast defences in the days of serious Japanese threat appropriately enough reminded us that we should be directly concerned with manning of our own defences and one way of doing so was to encourage the speedy necruiting of the active and reserve forces of navy, army and air. The General completely dismissed political considerations when he urged citizens to support the government in the defence measures which it saw fit to take.

THE WHITE CANE

THE WHITE CANE, the symbol of one who suffers with blindness, is also a challenge to the rest of the society and is in many ways an eloquent object lesson.

It is a challenge in that it demands attention and sympathetic support from those of us who enjoy the often unappreciated blessing of maintained sight.

It is an object lesson inasmuch as it shows that the one so afflicted is still mingling with society, still striving to take his part, still anxious to maintain independence and selfrespect within the limitations im-

The Canadian National Institute for the Blind, has developed a most helpful and understanding program.

It frankly seeks aid, so as to be able to conduct its valuable and merciful work. But such work is talso hinged to a determined purpose-to help the blind to help themselves. If, through the agency of the institute, a blind person can be placed in industry, and made a selfsupporting individual, such an outcome pleases the institute more than any other. This is because the organization realizes the psychological aspect of the lives of those whom it serves. There are also other ways in which the institute ministers, in helping the blind to help themselves. No more appealing cause exists, than in this effort to sustain and encourage those in "darkness" that never lifts.

There is every reason to give unstinting support to anything that aids the institution in its provision of services to the blind and in its prevention of blindness program.

ADVERTISING NEEDED

MAKING a magnificent contribution to the cause of victory and of freedom, advertising during war years was instrumental in helping to maintain the high morale of the people of the United Nations; increased the production of weapons of war; stimulated recruiting and boosted the sale of Victory Bonds and War Savings Stamps.

Today advertising is helping labor, management and government iron out grievances and settle unrest, strikes and difficulties now impeding our peace-time production.

Indications are that Canada is on the threshold of an era of progress and prosperity unparalleled in the long history of our country. To attain the highest degree of growth and expansion during this era, business, industry and finance must be backed with sound, sane and honest advertising.

IF WE WERE AMERICAN

F PRINCE RUPERT, the terminus of a transcontinental railway, was an American rather than a Canadian port, it would be as ridiculous to think of shipping goods from Seattle to Alaska as it would from San Francisco or Los Angeles. Products originating anywhere in the middle and eastern states would naturally be delivered by railway here and transferred to ships at this port for the short haul to such Alaska points as Ketchikan, Wrangell, Petersburg, Juneau, Sitka and Skagway as well as for the longer passage to the western ports of Anchorage, Cordova and Seward. There would be a tremendous volume of such traffic here.

With Seattle only interested in the exploiting of the territory and the American steamship lines apparently little concerned as to whether they have the Alaska traffic any longer, the incongruity of this port not being put to fuller use as the jumping off point for the territory now stands out sharply. Alaskans have been desirous in a passive sort of way for many years to have Prince Rupert rather than Seattle as their port of entry to the United States. Now their passive desire is becoming an insistent demand. The maritime strike which held up shipping from Seattle and precipitated a serious shortage of food and all other supplies was the last straw.

A correspondent, writing today from Petersburg, suggests that lack of knowledge about Prince Rupert and its position and possibilities has been a factor in the past in this port not being put to fuller use in serving the territory. Those who know the situation over the years may not agree with this for the present is not the first time that Alaskans themselves have endeavoured to trade this way, being prevented from so doing by restrictions and fetters imposed one way or another by Seattle and the shipping conipanies which controlled from that port. But never before, it seems, has there been such a determination as there is today on the part of the Alaskans to cut away the shackles which have tied them body and soul to Puget Sound. Now they may really be able to do something about it.

Of course, anything that Prince Rupert can do to promote its own position at this psychological moment should most certainly be done.

WOULD RENEW MILK SUBSIDY

Parent-Teachers Association So Requests-Regular Meeting Last Night

The importance of milk as an article of food was stressed last evening at the monthly meeting of the Borden Street School Parent-Teacher Association and a resolution was carried urging the city Parent-Teacher coordinating council to press for the restoration of the milk subsidy. J. S. Wilson, principal of Borden Street School, stated that 120 pupils were buying half pint of milk daily and he was very real benefit from it. He heartily endorsed a resolution on the matter which had been brought up by Mrs. G. R. S. There was an excellent attend-
