Cannot Afford to Work, New York Lawyer Claims

NEW YORK (P) - Working mothers deserve a break, believes Morris Ernst, lawyer, writer and veteran champion of the under dog.

"A career woman who must hire a housekeeper to take care of her children while she works should be allowed an additional income tax exemption for this expense," says Mr. Ernst, whose tenth book, "The First Freedom," has just been published.

The problem first came to his attention, he explains, when a young women lawyer was hired by his firm at the usual starting salary of $50 a week. Since she was married and had a small daughter, she has to hire a housekeeper at a salary of $30 a week. This left $20 of her salary free. Out of this she had to pay for lunches and carfare, averaging $5 a week, and in adheld for income tax. After pay-

Their shop also has become a depot for ex-prisoners-of-war. A large map of Australia on the wall has been signed by hundreds of names and addresses of men from the 8th Division which had to surrender to the Japanese at Singapore. Men of the 8th often come into the store and pore over the map to find out where their pals are.
