called how, while he was accountant for Robert Cunningham & Son of Port Essington away back between 1906 and 1906 he used to come into these parts on hunting trips.

Naturally, Mr. Cunningham was interested in looking up old-timers of Port Essington and among them he found Mrs. Agnes Rochester and Stewart Donaldson who, in those days, were small children.

Among the experiences which Mr. Cunningham recalled was attending a church service at Bella Bella soon after the turn of the century when the old steamer Tees became snowbound there. The skipper of the Tees was Capt. William Hughes.

When Mr. Cunningham was at Essington, the late Robert Cunningham was the magnate of the Skeena River, operating stores at Essington and Hazelton, a sawmill and the pioneer river steamer Hazelton.

A native of Fergus, Ontario, Mr. Cunningham arrived by train Tuesday night after visiting in Ottawa and Toronto and will proceed south enroute home on the Prince Rupert tonight.

HIGH PLACE IN LABOR COUNCIL

Alice Bacon, British M.P., Says Women Should Take Their Place at Side of Men

By JAMES McCOOK Canadian Press Staff Writer

LONDON @—Alice Bacon, a cheerful young Yorkshire woman, collected more than 3,000,000 votes when she was re-elected to the executive of the Labor Party—an accomplishment which her colleagues took to mean she was the most popular woman in the movement.

Miss Bacon takes it calmly. A member of parliament for Leeds Northeast and a force in the inner councils of the Labor Party, she has this recipe for feminine political success: "I'd say that women should not consider themselves apart from men, in some special category of public life. They should take their place at the side of men. They must have a political education, because they must have knowledge before they can hope to succeed. That means they must have an interest in public affairs.

"There is a field of opportunity for women in local affairs. They must be interested in all community problems but there are some they are better able to deal with, such as education, hospital service and infant and child welfare."

Miss Bacon then added with a smile the British Labor movement was looking to Canada "to keep up with" the rest of the Commonwealth—at least with the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand—to elect a Socialist government. A school-teacher herself, she said she hoped her advice would be of particular interest to C.C.F. schoolteachers who might be thinking of entering active politics.

Parental Enthusiasm

Miss Bacon said it was the enthusiasm, interest and encouragement of her parents that made her an active and forceful public speaker in her teens, a member of the Labor Party executive committee five years ago and won her a seat in parliament last year while still in her early twenties.

Since then she has been to Germany as a member of an official parliamentary delegation and soon she goes to Moscow with a Labor Party group to see what better understanding can be attained between the workers of the United Kingdom and Russia.

Her father, a coal miner, was an ardent trade unionist who, assisted by her mother, encouraged her to study Labor matters. As a member of the Labor party's League of Youth she learned platform confidence and established a reputation which finally carried her to the Commons last year when she gathered 28,270 votes against 20,400 for J. J. Craik Henderson, hard-fighting Conservative who had held the seat.

Her education—other than strictly political—was at elementary schools in her home town of Normanton, Yorkshire, and finally at Stockton and External London University.

Her colleagues say that her constant theme has been greater recognition of youth's place in the Labor movement.

TRAVEL IS HAZARDOUS

Passenger Buses Carry Mail and Deliver Parcels and Papers

By WILLIAM STEWART Canadian Press Staff Writer

HOKITIKA, N. Z., @—Drivers of 30-passenger buses which travel the narrow mountain roads of New Zealand's South Island know by heart all the turns and twists of the hairpin routes as well as residents of scattered communities to whom they bring mail, parcels and sometimes groceries.

On the west side of the South Island, buses supplement rail-lines extending only short distances, and link the tiny little mountain settlements with larger centres. They run along gravel roads so narrow in many places they must stop to meet trucks on their way between such places as Nelson, the northern port, Greymouth, west coast port, and Hokitika, old gold town located in the area first sighted by the Dutch discoverer of New Zealand, Abel Tasman, about the time of the foundation of Montreal.

Bus drivers take charge of mail bags which they toss to roadside boxes as they go along. They deliver newspapers on the run. Sometimes the busmen pick up parcels from grocery or butcher shops in small towns for customers several miles away.

The danger on trips of about 100 miles between Nelson and Inangahua through the Lyell and Spenser Mountains, or between Greymouth and Franz Josef in the Southern Alps is at blind corners halfway up mountains.

Often the roads are cut out of cliffsides with mountain face rising from one border and nothing but a drop to a winding river on the other.

Bus drivers are familiar with all points of interest along the roads and stop to show passengers giant trees, reflecting pools or perhaps a mountain lake such as Ianthe. They point out peculiarities or ridge formation such as the "Old Man of the Mountains," resembling a paunchy, recumbent giant, in the Spencers.

At this time of year, late fall in New Zealand, the southern mountain country is strikingly beautiful with golden poplars standing out sharply against evergreens, rain-swollen rivers running full in grey gravel beds, and vegetation of exotic coloring.
