International Limelight

The publicity that thas been given British responsibility in Greece and Indonesia as a result of Russian and Ukrainian complaints is so much to the good from the British point of view for Britain's actions in Greece and Indonesia have frequently been obscured and distorted by the emotions surrounding these issues and for political reasons.

UNO has much to gain by refusing to evade delicate issues such as these and the United Kingdom has nothing to lose from an international inquiry into their motives and actions.

In fact Foreign Secretary Bevin in his cards-on-the-table speech to the House of Commons in November invited just such action. "Great Britain," he asserted, "will not be afraid and will not in any way decline to have anything it does or wants or seeks to promote discussed in open assembly, at the United Nations, if necessary."

It may be pointed out in passing that the cases of Greece and Java are by no means parallel to that of Iran. In the letter, the question was raised not by the United Kingdom government or any third party, but by the Iranian government itself. In fact the United Kingdom government attempted to get the U.S.S.R. and Iran to settle the matter out of court. In the case of Greece and Indonesia, the question was raised by the Soviet and Ukrainian delegations respectively without consultation with the Greek or the Dutch governments and without attempting to get these governments and Britain to settle out of court. And indeed, Mr. Sophoulos, the Greek prime minister, issued a statement that United Kingdom troops are in Greece at the invitation and with the full co-operation of the Greek government for the purpose of maintaining order.

Canada's Decontrol Policy

In outlining the process of decontrol, Prime Minister Mackenzie King summed up the government's position in these words:

"There is a great deal of difference between a gradual and planned policy of adjustment to post-war conditions, which may involve some modest increase in prices; and a policy of rapid removal of anti-inflation controls. The objective of the government's policy is to continue to protect the people of Canada from a sharp upswing in prices and living costs, and from the inevitable aftermath of deflation, unemployment and distress. Its purpose is to protect the value of wages and wartime savings. It is aimed to help open larger markets both at home and abroad, and thus hasten progress toward the high level of peacetime production and employment which is our leading economic objective. With the intelligent support of the Canadian people Canada's anti-inflation program will achieve its aim. It will bring our country through the most destructive war in history and its aftermath without the economic and social disruption which has bee nthe sorry heritage of past conflicts."

Co-operation

The family is the chief character building agency in the lives of our children, says "Anglican Outlook." It has been stated by a child training expert that "the Church alone can never make children Christian, it can not make them religious, it can not even make them moral. If a child from a good home does something anti-social, it is his parents who must be blamed, not his Church."

It is to be deplored that the modern trend is to leave to the school and Church the matter of the child's Christian education. In spite of the fact that much of the modern child's was planned years ago and now time is taken up with day school ac- made possible chiefly for two just wanted to tell you that I tivities, organized recreation, music reasons. Someone will say that twelve hours plan by the citizens and in the of the day are spent in sleep, but even recent war years by the many the character of sleep is influenced wartime workers and members by the events of the day and its of the various armed forces staclosing moments.

The quality of the parent's own life is an essential in the education of the child. Children initiate adult patterns of thought and word. We teach children through our own ac tions. As the adults in the family act, so will the children. All the details of family life should be lifted from the common place to a spiritua | ing the situation and it is in level to make the teaching of the order to bring these out in the Sunday Church School effective. It will be worn by the moving force itself as well as members of the three services participating in the exercise. Embodying all three services the three-toned patch-pale blue, silvery-white and black, shows a naval vessel, aircraft and igloo (in which the moving force lives much of the time) against stark white mountains of the barren Arctic where "Exercise Muskox" is taking place. BANKING IN ACTION

The Canadian Bank of Commerce has pioneered by opening branches with the first rush to new mining fields. Cariboo, the Yukon, Cobalt, Northern Ontario and Quebec, Flin Flon and Yellowknife are only some of the names associated with its service to the mining industry.

THE MINING INDUSTRY contributes directly to I the national wealth of Canada by the output of its mines. It also influences the economy of the entire Dominion; for it creates widespread employment, purchases great quantities of food, clothing, machinery and equipment all over Canada, and builds and maintains whole communities which in turn add to Canada's prosperity.

In its day-to-day operations mining requires many banking services. This is Banking in Action.
