LIFE in this Prince Rupert
by BIDDEE JINKS

It's going to be different this year—Christmas, I mean. When the announcement is made "There are only 10 more shopping days until Christmas" nothing is going to roll all up inside of men and then burst with an internal bombardment something like the atomic bomb. No sir! Not this year—and I'll tell you why.

First of all, no more mail order shopping for me. It seems so simple, just sitting in your favorite chair, choosing the things you want and ordering them. Everything looks so good too—in the catalogue! Those glossy pages with everything from toys to Aunt Mattie's gloves and Uncle's shirt just reach out and beckon at you. But can you get them! And when one order-house lets you down surely one of the other six might not. But no—they can't do it either. So that's what I say. No final blank order is going to come sailing in on December 23 this year to leave me limp and in special need of Christmas "spirits" on the eve of the twenty-fourth. After 12 hours of steady shopping, I'm home with an empty purse and the wrapping staring me in the face.

Then, too, this year I can mail

...cuse me, but I've just got to get this mailed!"

The wicket is getting slightly closer now and the toes have begun to feel like toes again and the ribs are gently responding to the rise and fall of normal breathing when some husky creature, seeing an inch or two of space, squeezes into the line just in front of you. A wave of faintness assails you almost immediately 'bathing once a week is not enough, says Health Rule No. 1) and then he turns and yawns squarely in your face! People talk so nonchalantly of "last straws." I wonder, have they ever been held in a vise, one all rigged out in Christmas wrappings (and it seems to me that someone was humming a carol) while 100 per cent halitosis is breathed out right under their nose!

But human nature is wonderful, so they say, and I thought so myself when I saw the wicket only three people away. Yes, it was worth it all to get these parcels off. The poor dears would get them on time, too if they left on tonight's mail. And I didn't mind it so much. In fact, it was worth it all now that it was just about over. There! "She" was finished and that left only two people in front of me. I even turned to cast a pitying glance at the poor unfortunates strung away out behind me. Oh, well! If I did it, they could. Then I heard a bang. I dared not look. I just sort of peeked. It couldn't be—but it was. The wicket was closed!

A blighted Christmas, that's what it was. Santa Claus himself must have felt the pinch from his cherry nose to where he shakes like a bowlful of jelly. Any skinny chimney admitted him and his pack that year. But as I say, we're a cheerful lot. Optimism is the word. That's why this Christmas is going to be different.
