Trying to Stop Prince Rupert

The article written by Richard L. Neuberger, noted Portland newspaper correspondent, which we are featuring in the Daily News today, doubtless, will suggest to many a basic reason why Prince Rupert seems to be encountering so much difficulty these days everywhere it turns in its campaign for recognition and use in post-war world trade and commerce. Mr. Neuberger, who sees this port in long range in relation to possibilities of future traffic with Alaska on the one hand and with the Orient on the other, goes so far as to suggest that such ports as Portland, Seattle, Tacoma and Vancouver may be "foredoomed" if Prince Rupert is allowed, without interference and regulation, to play the part to which its strategic location entitles it in the natural development of world trade with particular relation to the Pacific area.

Possibly, Mr. Neuberger's article lets the cat out of the bag as to the reason for opposition, delay, inaction and indifference we currently encounter in advocating anything looking to Prince Rupert development. To think or talk this way was once considered small and local and we were so berated for our "suspicions" that we developed an inferiority complex and came to feel that we were not very important after all. But when outsiders like Mr. Neuberger, writing from the very cities which we threaten, write so strongly and candidly as is done in the article, we may take new heart and continue our fight for recognition with fresh vigor, determination and confidence.

We are indebted to Mr. Neuberger for the very fine publicity he gives Prince Rupert not only in this article in "Alaska Life" but elsewhere. Other publications to which he contributes include such as New York Times, Saturday Evening Post, Liberty, etc., so we have in him a powerful publicity friend.

Frank Talk Needed

There is more to the task of arriving at a settlement of the Iranian dispute than simply "facing up" to Russia. Straight talk will certainly be more useful than loud talk from unofficial and irresponsible critics of Russia. But it will invite straight talk from Moscow.

The interchange should prove instructive. For one thing, it may lighten a dark corner of power politics where the Big Three seem engaged in manoeuvres for strategic advantage. There are questions besides those of the rights of Iranians involved in this dispute. The Middle East is one of the spots where British and Russian security needs rub hard against each other.

Moreover, there is oil in Iran. Russia wants some of that oil. The Iranian government at Teheran has favored British and American oil interests. The revolt in Azerbaijan has given Russia an opportunity to press harder on Teheran for oil concessions.

But the Iranian issue cannot be fully explained in these wholly materialistic terms. Back of the American and British position is a desire to serve not only the letter but the spirit of the United Nations Charter, and indeed to expand the area of confidence among the Big Three, on whose unity the United Nations Organization depends. And for the Russians it can be said that their presence in northern Iran has served the cause of progressive elements there whose achievements have been recognized from countries besides Russia.

What is needed now is all-around readiness to call Iranian spades spades. All the Big Three can profit if their aim is to establish good relations on a basis of friendship.

Britain or United States

While some might fail to see any particular reason for Mr. Bracken raising at this time the issue of whether Canada should adopt a policy which would "help preserve and strengthen the British Commonwealth of Nations" rather than one by which Canada would "become eventually a forty-ninth state in the American union," there will be little quarrel with him as to where Canadians would stand if such an issue ever arose. Even the greatest British statesmen, most outspoken among them being the former Prime Minister, Winston Churchill himself, urge the closest and most intimate of ties between Britain and the United States so there can be little point in Mr. Bracken's suggestion, if he meant it as such, that closest relationships between Canada and the United States could not be compatible with the strongest support by Canada of the British Commonwealth of Nations. Of course, there will always be that strong support of the British Commonwealth as long as Prime Minister Mackenzie King is at the helm and Mr. King's friendship with the United States is equally well known.

RETURNS SOUTH WITHOUT CARGO

Union steamer Cardena, following diver's inspection at Port Clements of her bottom which was damaged late Saturday afternoon when she went aground in Masset Inlet, later being refloated, arrived at Prince Rupert at midnight last night.

None of the Cardena's 14 passengers were aboard when she made the crossing from Port Clements. The cargo was brought to Prince Rupert and unloaded.

The Cardena will not make her scheduled return voyage to Vancouver via the Islands but is returning to Vancouver directly and without cargo in order to receive repairs.

After arrival here the Cardena unloaded her small amount of cargo in order to make a direct run to Vancouver. Most of the cargo was for points on the south Queen Charlotte Islands, which will be taken over by the next boat.

There was no excitement among the passengers as the ship ran ashore, nor was there any during the 21 hours she remained aground. She struck at 5:10 Saturday afternoon and was refloated shortly after 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon.

There was a light mist as the Cardena was making passage through Masset Inlet but not enough to reduce visibility greatly. The Cardena was making the first Queen Charlotte Islands run of her career.

Strong Tidal Current Blamed

A strong tidal current edged the steamer Cardena close to shore as she was making her outward passage through Masset Inlet to Port Clements late Saturday afternoon until, as she rounded Cook Point, the vessel was forced aground in spite of the efforts of her captain to head for mid-channel.

Her bottom reported to be only slightly damaged, the Cardena was to sail direct from Prince Rupert for Vancouver this afternoon without passengers or cargo to obtain whatever repairs are necessary to make her seaworthy.

Inspection of the ship's bottom at Port Clements was made by diver Rayner Montgomery of Armour Salvage Co. who went over Sunday in the Prince Rupert Fishermen's Co-operative tug Kanawaka.

Her 14 passengers at Port Clements are expected to be flown to Prince Rupert late this afternoon or Wednesday morning by a Queen Charlotte Air Lines plane chartered by logging companies on the Island. Most of the passengers were loggers.

LETTERBOX

WE ARE "JERKS"
Editor, Daily News:
In reply to Julian Nash referring to the people of Prince Rupert as a bunch of "Jerks," I quite agree with Mr. Nash. We are a bunch of "Jerks" and hope we continue to be such. The proper definition of a "Jerk" is "to give a sudden pull, thrust or push." That I hope is what every man, woman and child will do in Prince Rupert, not only now but at all times, for the betterment of the finest city in western Canada and as far as I am concerned personally on the North American Continent.
J. H. MAIR.

SEEK KINGDOM OF GOD

Editor, Daily News:
To my mind one of the things Prince Rupert needs is exactly that which any other city needs. This is to "seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness." When this is done "all these things shall be added unto us."
Yours for progress,
LUCY E. WISHART.

CATHEDRAL NEEDED

Editor, Daily News:
I think we need a new cathedral in Prince Rupert built in the centre of town, containing, perhaps, an electric organ so that we could listen to recitals after the close of evening services.

Why do the clergymen not call on us any more to encourage us to attend their services? If they could not come themselves they might send their representatives. We are told to give one-tenth of our income to the church but do we have a chance?

Then, too, we also need a new library and reading room in a better location than the present one.

We have a fine auditorium in the Civic Centre and a fine hospital of which we may well be proud.

We could do with a little more advertising such as "Watch Prince Rupert Grow."
PRO PATRICK.

Telegraphs Feature Easter Greetings

MONTREAL—Reappearing after the austere war years in time for this year's Easter parade, are the specially designed social and greeting telegram forms, according to an announcement by Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Telegraph headquarters. Popular, in pre-war days, these colorful and attractively designed holiday telegram blanks were discontinued during the war years. Now, once more, they are to become carriers of joy and happiness. Business messages, however, will continue to be delivered on standard forms.

School Sets Goal Of Social Reform

NEW DELHI, (C)—Mrs. M. W. Nichol, member of the British Parliamentary delegation to India, recently visited Lady Irwin College founded here in 1932 by the All-India Education Fund Association.

Subjects at the school, which aims at turning out capable wives and mothers, include cookery, laundry, needlework, gardening, first aid, home nursing and mothercraft.

Facilities are given to students to spend at least a week in a village to see conditions in rural India and the need for progress. Intention is to prepare the girls for the task of social reform.

Winners of the stockings were

PATTULLO - - Covers the B.C. Legislature

(T. D. Pattullo, who started his career as a newspaperman back in Woodstock, Ontario, before he came west in the Gold Rush days to become for almost half a century one of British Columbia's most prominent figures, finally achieving the Premiership of the province, is back in newspaper work again. The Daily News is pleased to announce that Mr. Pattullo has agreed to supply us with his commentary from the press gallery at the Legislature in Victoria. It will be presented daily as long as the session lasts.)

VICTORIA (By T. D. Pattullo)—As might have been anticipated, strong objection is being taken to the cost of land clearing under the government's new policy. Part of the cost of the land clearing will have to be paid by the public at large.

In the Comox area of Vancouver Island land has been cleared at a cost of several hundred dollars per acre to make possible the production of low price crops at cost per acre much less than on other Comox lands.

The land clearing matter is similar to what happened in the dry belt in respect of irrigation. Years ago experimentation was carried on in drilling for water and results were very unsatisfactory. This created acrimonious feelings as the cost was placed in large measure upon the public at large while the Comox area paid for its own.

Inequalities under governmental activities are as variable as is human nature.
