CAMERA CATCHES FORK-TONGUED LIZARD IN ACTION—The photographer set his lens at 1/100th of a second to make this unusual picture of a yellow monitor, native of north India, Burma and Malay, just as his forked tongue, well over six inches long, had cracked the shell of an egg. The strange lizard, the very first ever displayed at the Bronx zoo, New York, came from India two weeks ago. It feeds on the egges and on smaller animals. It took severalexposures to get the photo, because before the reflexes of the camermen go into action to trip the shutter, the tongue is back in its mouth.
