Began In Manchester

When John Tiller began his Phone 116 famous dancing school in Manchester in 1890, he developed with his troupes of chorus girls a type of highly trained team dancing never before seen on the stage but soon widely copied, especially in America.

But the Tiller girls were famous not only for their dancing. 'Les girls Anglaises" as the French called them, had a reputation for virtue, and the strict discipline of Mr. and Mrs. Tiller left some of the Latin countries SMITH & ELKINS LTD.

This reputation became a commercial asset much prized still by the old staff members, now P.O. Box 274 directing the school as a private limited company, according to John Tiller's wishes expressed before he died in 1925. The school is still being run in the same personal way as in the days when Mrs. Tiller helped the girls do their laundry and advised them on love affairs. All the girls want to go abroad. We've never been able to go aboard since we grew up," said one. "That's what we want more than anything. To get to France again, like the girls used to before the war. Or America. Or anywhere." "We've had offers from managers in Paris," said Miss Doris. 'But so far we've turned them down. It doesn't seem to us the Continent is the right place for young girls just now. We can't P.O. Box 1286 - Phone Black 823 tell what the food will be like or the occommodations.

"But we hope we'll soon have girls again at the Folies Bergeres and other famous French Halls.'
