VALETTA, Malta — Some idea of Malta's housing problem may be gleaned from figures showing that in seven months of 1945 only 396 families were rehoused, leaving 2,579 families still to be found adequate accommodation. The chief difficulty is insufficient building operatives.

ZULU VILLAGE RESTORATION ... CAPE TOWN, — Headquarters of the infamous King Dingaan, the Natal centre of the former royal kingdom of Zululand may rise again from the ashes it became when the Zulus used a "scorched-earth" policy in 1838. The South African Historical Monuments Commission is considering rebuilding the more important huts in the kraal. The intention to reopen some grain pits, which have remained untouched since Dingaan's defeat in 1838, may cause some difficulty, owing to the natives' superstition. The history of Dingaan is one of murderous treachery. In 1837, Pieter Retief, leader of the first party of Boer immigrants to enter Natal, received formal concession to settle in the country and then was murdered by the Zulus under Dingaan's orders. After two unsuccessful attempts to avenge their slain in which the Boers were aided by the British, Dingaan's army was defeated on December 16, 1838, by a Boer force under Andries Pretorius. The defeat of the Zulus as well as the anniversary of the proclamation of Boer independence in South Africa on Dingaan's Day, December 16. Members of the Historical Monuments Commission feel that if the natives are assured that the reconstruction of the kraal will perpetuate their history the move will be welcome. From several descriptions written by contemporary European traders and missionaries it is believed the kraal was formed of two concentric circular hedges between which stood the circular row of huts. Opposite the entrance were the king's quarters where his wives were housed in a seclusion which meant death to any male intruders. According to a report left by Retief, the royal kraal contained 1,700 huts, each of which accommodated about 20 men, forming more of a barracks than a town. It was here that Retief and his associates were killed by Dingaan. When the avenging Boers arrived at the kraal a few months later they found it in flames and deserted.
