In many sections of the country where opposition to preventative medicine has eased, deadly apathy, has moved in.

September 10 to 16 will be annual National Immunization Week, sponsored by the Health League of Canada. It is intended to direct attention of parents to the dangers of preventable communicable diseases such as whooping cough, diphtheria, scarlet fever and smallpox, which yearly take a toll of hundrers of young Canadian lives.

When we wish a house built we go to the men who specialize in house construction and abide by their judgment. We do not hesitate in taking the word of the electrical engineers or acting on the advice of our lawyers. We know they are trained in their lines and, if conscientious and scrupulous, will act in our best interests.

Our doctors are specialists in health. They strongly advocate vaccination and inoculation. Then why should the public hesitate? Surely they should follow the advice of trained men on matters concerning the health and lives of their children and loved ones.
