I into a great Canadian halfway port ... take off for British bases . . . then on to the all-important job of bringing war home to the enemy. This is but one of the many ways that Canada serves as a vital link between the United States and Great Britain.

And English, Canadian and American airmen flying wing to wing have shown the same high courage and daring . . . shared the same dangers. Their success has proved that our greatest strength lies in unity . . . that in peace, as in war, we must work together for a better world!

As Churchill declared, "Canada is the 'linch-pin' between Great Britain and the United States". Truly, we Canadians can do much for future world security by furthering the mutual understanding of these two great democracies. This is our responsibility. Let us prove worthy of it!
