LETTERBOX

CURSE OF LIQUOR Editor, Daily News:

To those home owners who doubt the lesser of the two evils would do well to take a trip around our parks and rooming houses and count the number of small bottles that are strewn around—small bottles with more scents and flavors than all the lovely flowers on our slopes or in our gardens. But each of those bottles are packed with dynamite that wrecks the mind and also the body. That is the stuff! that is drunk today. Before the war you could count the bottles on one hand. Today the count is 500 in this town alone. The cancer has even got into the two armies stationed here and some of those boys have but lately come from good homes. Are we building a healthy nation or are we making a farce of it and making a mob of mental and physical wrecks? And where does the supply come from?

Tomorrow-what of tomorrow while your children, that you had such hopes for, that you! cherished and slaved for, demand that stuff with their meals instead of coffee. Surely you have left them a fitting heritage. Did you not hope that; when old frail hands can no longer hold the helm steady that young stronger hands would take over. Are they too young to start training to steer clear of those rocks that they are sure to meet ahead?

They are growing up among you today and far too quickly. Their training requires patience understanding and above all an able example. We can benefit! from mistakes but can we stand by and see the future generation go through the same mistakes? Is it the responsibility of the hand that rocks the cradle alone? No I think it is a full! time job for all concerned. If we fulfil our part today they will fulfil their part tomorrow and take over the helm with credit and be a credit to the land they are so proud to be a part of. WORKER.

Are you entertaining out-oftown house guests? You will be doing them an honor by having us publish a personal note about their visit.
