HARD WINTER AHEAD—

CHILDREN'S GARMENTS AND SHOES SCARCE AT SCHOOL TERM OPENING

That Tin Pan Alley ditty, "I've Got My Love to Keep Me Warm," may become a theme song among Prince Rupert youngsters this fall if greater supplies of children's clothing are not made available to local retailers for distribution to the public. A survey by the Daily News reveals shortages of almost every type of garment worn by children of school and pre-school ages.

Clothing store operators say that in spite of their pleas to the government and manufacturers, they have received no indication that the situation will be relieved in the immmediate future.

Lacking on their shelves are children's underwear, girls' dresses, boys' dress trousers, and all types of youngsters' shoes.

"The situation is particularly bad in children's underwear," the proprietor of a girls' and ladies' wear shop said. "I really pity the mothers who come into the store and continually go away disappointed."

Father Loses Out To the Children

She could not help smiling when she told of a woman who had confessed to cutting up her husband's underwear to make undergarments for the children. "Apparently the husband could not appreciate her desperation," the storekeeper chuckled.

As the school season approaches, mothers investigate counters and racks in the hope of finding warm serviceable garments for their children. They are fortunate enough to obtain sweaters and rain clothes.

"The operator of a group of stores which sell both boys' and girls' clothing said that he was moderately well supplied in most lines because he had been able to dig limited supplies on his frequent buying trips to the east.

"I have a fair supply of most things because I was lucky. However, girls' dresses and underwear are out of stock."

He blamed both the government and the manufacturers for the predicament.

"Factory workers prefer to make adult clothing because they are easier and more money can be made at piecework. Factory owners, too, do not object because they get a larger profit margin on adult clothing," he commented. "It is up to the government to see that they make clothing for the whole population."

Government Has Not Acted on Situation

He recalled that as long as two years ago the government had admitted that such a situation might come about.

"They don't seem to have done anything about it yet," he added.

So far "all Prince Rupert chillum got shoes," but when they will be able to get new ones is something for their parents to worry about. Groping for even a temporary solution, shoe dealers have enlisted the aid of Wartime Prices and Trade Board to bring children's footwear to the city.

Asked to comment, one retailer dealing in popular brands of boys' and girls' shoes brought out a factory catalogue. He thumbed through its pages of illustrations.

"That is what we haven't got," he said.

Retailers emphasize that these shortages are not caused by delay in transpo tardiness in ordering a definite dislocation
