EARLY PREPARATION—FLIER TELLS HOW FIRST ATTACKS WERE MADE ON ROBOT BOMB SITES

Written for The Canadian Press By Flt. Lt. Peter Field, R.C.A.F. WITH THE R.C.A.F. in BRITAIN, Aug. 11 —The men who fly medium bombers from Britain, many of them Canadians, were among the first to be "briefed" for attacks on the "postage stamp" targets of the flying bomb sites in France, it can now be revealed.

They are the men flying Mitchell, Boston and Mosquito bombers of the Allied Expeditionary Air Force in which many R.C.A.F. personnel operate. They have been attacking marshalling yards, gun batteries, E-boat pens, ammunition and fuel dumps and other such targets. Then came the need for them to switch their attacks to the flying bomb sites. It was good practice for the bomb aimers, if they needed it, for the D-Day assault.

But it was arduous work for the crews, for not only were they sent out to attack these targets, but they also continued to carry out other preparatory invasion work, had to undergo courses of night flying and battle training in readiness for their move to the continent and to exchange their usual quarters for tents so as to get used to field conditions.

The log of one Canadian flier, FO. Donald Sargent, a wireless operator from Brantford, Ont., reveals this activity. He started to attack flying bomb sites last November and on one day in that month attacked two sites, both of which were destroyed and the log laconically mentions "several holes in aircraft from moderate flak."

In December, Sargent flew on five sorties against flying bomb sites and again entered up "holed again several times by flak." In January he flew on 11 sorties against these targets as well as many trips to other objectives. Again there were notes by the side of each entry—"very heavy flak, several holes." February found him making six sorties against the sites with the usual comments.

His log book is a sample of ected her president of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, she strongly advocated the expansion of its membership to include women workers in war industries. (The federation gave its first charter to a group of industrial workers—in Seattle—in June.

MORE INDIAN OFFICERS
NEW DELHI —A great expansion has taken place in the Indian Officer Corps. After the last war there were only 12 commissioned Indian officers. At the outbreak of this war the number had grown to 500. Today 30,000 Indian officers are in the field and 45 per cent of the Indian Army is officered by Indians. Indian and British officers may have both European and Indian troops under their command.

PREMIER ELECT OF QUEBEC

A second election was called August 17 by the new liberal premier, Adelard Godbout. Before the campaign was well under way, coolness that had developed between Gouin and Duplessis became an open break. Mr. Gouin charged Mr. Duplessis with having failed to live up to their coalition pact and withdrew his party but 22 of the 26 A. N. L. members elected to the legislature in 1935 joined Mr. Duplessis under the Union Nationale.

First Bachelor To Be Quebec Premier

The new Union Nationale elected 76 members to the Liberals 14 and Premier Godbout was personally defeated. Mr. Duplessis is a bachelor, the first to become premier of Quebec.

The new government held its first session in 1937 and passed the well known "padlock" law, giving police authority to lock any building to prevent dissemination of Communist propaganda.

Shortly after Canada declared war in 1939, Mr. Duplessis called a general election "because I was given a mandate to govern in peace time and I need a new one to govern in wartime," and because, he said, federal wartime measures were encroaching on provincial autonomy. His government was defeated, the Liberal party under Mr. Godbout being given 70 of the 86 seats.

Mr. Duplessis was elected in his own riding and resumed the leadership of the opposition.
