Opening Contribution to Pioneers' Home From One of Inmates

Among the first public contributions toward financing a new Pioneers' Home in the city was for $2, turned over to the Daily News by S. B. Caulder, supervisor of the present Home, on behalf of an inmate who preferred to have his name remain unknown.

"The man who gave it is one of four here who receives an old age pension," Mr. Caulder explained. "I think it is a pretty clear indication of how the men themselves feel about getting a new Home."

Mr. Caulder revealed that the pensioners turn in $15 each month to contribute to their keep, retaining the balance for their own uses. . Those who have no income are provided for wholly by the city.

None of the men, whose ages range from 56 to 84 years, is able to work. The youngest is a disabled war veteran, afflicted with a nervous disorder from his battle experience. The oldest is bedridden. Among the others is a man who operated the pile driver which helped to build the first wharf on the Prince Rupert waterfront in 1907. He worked on the waterfront for years after-

"This island was covered with virgin timber when I first landed here from Vancouver," he recalled,

Another man worked in mines in this district after coming here in 1909.

All are extremely interested in the city council's decision to build a new Home.
