However, it | cial said: "It would take three probably would lack a majority men to replace Landis." vote. There is one very noticeable angle to this search for a new baseball commissioner. There is a tendency to lean toward a big name not now connected with the sport, such as Jim Farley, or the various military leaders. At this hour it remains a mystery why the game feels it needs to search beyond its walls. When Judge Landis was appointed about 25 years ago, there was a sound reason for seeking an outsider. The Black Sox had sold out to the gamblers and the game needed a man who would revive the faith of the customers and give them assurance that nothing of the sort would happen again. Landis, the white-haired jurist and a familiar figure about the Chicago parks, was to supply that assurance.

But today, the character of baseball never was in finer shape. There is no particular need for a magnetic personality to sell the game to the nation. Its honesty has long since been re-established. The fan is quick to forget and forgive.

What the majors want now is a Bert Bellamy sound baseball man, rich in background, who thoroughly understands the needs of the magnate and the players, who has Lumber had his fingers on the game's pulse for a number of years. A man like Bob Quinn or Clark Griffith or Ed Barrow or William Harridge,. Perhaps men like Quinn, Griffith or Barrow would not be willing to assume the burdens of the commissioner's office at this late date in their careers. But they should be wel-

It may be that when the maj-! ors get around to settling the issue, they will name a board instead of one man. It is suggested that Leslie O'Connor, Lands's secretary, and Will Harridge and
