TYESTUFFS have always been an important article of commerce. Long years ago, in the days of earliest navigation, ships sailed to distant points, braved the dangers of uncharted seas in their search for more brilliant reds and blues that would not fade. Tyre itself rose to fame largely on the quality of the dyes that it could offer to the early world.

To-day the important part that dyes play in industry is no secret. Busy shoppers look for smart materials, feel their fine texture and ask, "Is the colour fast?"

The answer to-day can be in the affirmative, for such is the progress in the manufacture of dyes that colours are available in Canada now that are equal to any the world has yet produced. Silks, cottons, rayons, woollens and other fabrics can take on the brilliance of the rainbow, resistant to sunlight, to perspiration, to salt air and water, to constant tubbing or dry cleaning according to the purpose for which they may be intended.

And thus through the magic of commercial chemistry, the test tube has replaced the sailing ship and man's search for brilliance need go no further than the confines of the laboratory.

To provide dyes equal to every need of the textile, paper and leather industries of Canada is one of the many functions of the Organic Chemicals Division of Canadian Industries Limited.
