Ginger Rogers And Ray Milland

Ginger Rogers and Ray Milland, not seen on the screen together since their hilarious comedy, "The Major and the Minor," have been reunited by Paramount for "Lady in the Dark," which opens Thursday at the Capitol Theatre for a three-day

Based upon the play by Moss Hart, with music by Kurt Weill and lyrics by Ira Gershwin, the film version of "Lady in the Dark" is said to surpass in visual beauty its stage sister, and to provide for the talented Ginger and Milland another hit. Filmed in technicolor, the story of the woman editor of a magazine whose repressions almost wreck her life, is told, against a background of dreams brought to life when Ginger, who plays the woman, is induced to visit a psychoanalyst.

"Lady in the Dark" was produced and directed by Mitchell Leisen whose past hits have have proved him one of Hollywood's top picture-makers.
