No Time to Modify . . .

. Some experts in the field of international affairs are saying that the forthcoming San Francisco parley of the United Nations may want to urge a modification of the unconditional surrender terms agreed on by the Big Three for Germany and presumably to be applied likewise to the Japanese.

One war should have taught us the folly of pampering the militaristic nations and letting them off without learning what war really means. No major battles were fought on German soil in 1918, German homes and facteries escaped undamaged and, even when reparations payments were forced, readjustments and moratoria were allowed. As for the extra lives it is costing us to whip Germany this time, the only reply is that this cost probably will be much less, in both lives and men, than fighting Germany again 25 or 30 years from now if she escapes punishment this time.

are at last coming to the surface. There are, too, those who wonder what the Axis would have allowed us in the way of terms, had it been victorious. When one ponders that, he can generally conclude that anything more on the Christian side can be served up to our enemies in all good conscience and the cause of prolonged peace still be served.

Ignoble Argentina . . .

Of course, Argentina, with her belated declaration of war on the Axis, made because she was told she could not sit as one of the family of American nations which will participate in post-war affairs unless she openly declared herself at this time, cannot be considered as being in a very honored position. The declaration is little more than a gesture and, in view of the record, there can be little sincerity about it. Argentina's political philosophy can be no different today than it was when she was so openly friendly with the Axis. It is not even a "fair weather friendship" as far as we are concerned, Argentina turned on her old friend just because there was nothing else to do in saving her own hide.
