A similar incident occurred in 1905 in a Test match at The Oval, it was disclosed. The Laws of Cricket, dated 1830, came off the shelf and were found to state: "No substitute in the field shall be allowed to bowl, keep wicket, stand at the point or middle wicket, or step behind to a fast bowler, unless by the consent of | poned. the opposite party." That phrase, "unless by the consent of the opposite party," seemed to meet the situation, and it was generally agreed there had been no infraction of the hoary regulations

The match, incidentally, ended in a draw.
