Aircraft With Six Aboard Found Safe Outside Harbor

Ship Crashed In Bush After Escaping Rough Seas During Fierce Gale Yesterday

After a miraculous escape with their lives following a landing in the bush of rugged Porcher, Island when Flying Officer Kirkwood hit the trees while attempting to bring his Norseman monoplane down to harbor to escape a raging gale at 4:10 Sunday afternoon, six Royal Canadian Air Force personnel are safe back in Prince Rupert this afternoon. They were flown in by searching planes which this morning had sighted the wreck and the survivors. Apart from minor scratches, there were no injuries in one of the most providential incidents of its kind in the history of coast flying. The first three survivors arrived here in another Norseman at 1:50 this afternoon and the remaining three are coming on a Goose about 3 o'clock. Of the party of six, two were crew of the plane and four passengers of R.C.A.F. personnel.

Intimation that the missing aircraft might have been found came shortly before noon when Squadron Leader Benson, commanding officer, Seal Cove, received a terse message from one of the searching planes that they "thought they had found it." No location was given in this first message and attendants at the air distress office waited anxiously for further word from the searching planes. Four aircraft, a Norseman from Prince Rupert and a Hudson and two Dakota bombers from Vancouver were scouring island-dotted coastline, complemented by an air force and a navy patrol boat.

In gale-swept waters within a radius of fifteen or twenty miles outside of Prince Rupert Harbor, the single-engined Norseman monoplane had been missing since Sunday afternoon with six Royal Canadian Air Force personnel on board. It was feared forced down on the extremely rough sea in which case it would have had little chance, of survival. The plane left Aliford Bay, LOAN DRIVE where it was based, for Prince Rupert at 3 o'clock Sunday af-ternoon and was last reported ON RAILWAY at 3:40 p.m., being then fifteen minutes out of Prince Rupert just south of Stevens Island.
