GAME ANIMALS MORE PLENTIFUL IN COAST AREA THAN EVER BEFORE

Game Commissioner J. H. Cunningham Tells Rod and Gun Club Dinner That Islands Will Become Popular Hunting Ground; Shows Colored Wild Life Films

Showing of a 40-minute film of wild life in technicolor, and commentary by J. H. Cunningham of Vancouver, British Columbia Game Commissioner, featured the annual dinner of the Prince Rupert Rod and Gun Club last night.

The banquet was attended by nearly 300 sportsmen and was presided over by chairman James Bacon.

During the course of his remarks, Mr. Cunningham predicted that the Queen Charlotte Islands would become a popular hunting ground once the northern B.C. area was more densely populated.

He revealed that, with the exception of Caribou, game was never so plentiful in B.C. as it is at present.

"Up to 20 years ago," he went on, "game came no nearer than Coquitlam to the ocean, but now they are almost to the coastline."

A toast to U.S.-Canadian friendship by Mr. Bacon was responded to by Col. J. H. Melom, port commander, and a toast to the absent members by Charlie Balagno brought a response from Col. F. W. Stewart, deputy port commander.

During the program, Staff Sergeant Stuart Carson, of Edmonton, entertained with songs. Appropriate food was served to the anglers and nimrods in the form of salmon and moose meat.
