"This Is a Dangerous World"

"This is a dangerous world" said Field Marshal Jan Smuts, speaking at the Canadian Club in Ottawa during his recent visit to Canada. The truth of that statement has been too obvious to our returning fighting men and to the people of half the world in these last six years. The Field Marshal was pleading for preparedness against a recurrence of world war.

"Don't," he said, "let the San Francisco Conference give the impression that you can go home, and that will be all there is to it. I want to impress most strongly that that would be a dangerous delusion. The problem of maintaining peace is a perplexing one. But part of it—and this is essential—is preparedness."

Blind optimists may regard Jan Smuts as a pessimist and pacifists may accuse him of pleading for a continuance of militarism. But he is neither a pessimist nor a war-monger. Although he is a soldier, his whole life has shown him to be a man of peace and good-will. Good-will, in fact, is the secret of the peace that has existed between the British and the Dutch of South Africa in the last forty years, and if the same good-will could be established among the nations of the world, then universal peace would be assured.

But the good-will must be mutual, and not one-sided, as was the relationship between Britain and Germany. Britain gave conclusive evidence of good-will towards the German people, and even towards Hitler, as Neville Chamberlain demonstrated by his humiliating visit to Munich. Chamberlain was a blind optimist and a pacifist, as were most of the people of Britain and of the British Commonwealth at that time. If they had backed their good-will by preparedness to meet the obvious threat of Nazi Germany, the war might have been averted.

It might be argued that preparations for war would inevitably lead to even greater war in the future, and that lasting world peace can be secured only by disarmament. But this last and worst of all wars is the answer to that argument. As the Field Marshal said: "One of the potent causes of this last war was that the good-will nations disarmed and the enemy counted on that."

Opportunity to Be Embraced

Prince Rupert is being presented with the opportunity to cash in on some real publicity through the "Miss America" bathing beauty contest which is to be held in connection with the forthcoming Civic Centre Carnival. The bathing beauty contest should not be confused with the Queen of the Carnival contest which is now under way with four candidates in the field.

Interior points such as Burns Lake and Prince George have become actively interested in the bathing beauty contest but Prince Rupert itself appears to be slow in grasping a double opportunity.

First of all, the girl who wins the contest, and a girl is definitely to go from here, will receive a free trip to Atlantic City and all the pleasures and glory that will go with same.

A "Miss Northern British Columbia" will also bring much notice and publicity to this part of the country and that will be all to the good in the campaign for publicity to which we are now committed.

Back to "Business as Usual"

Advices to the advertising department of the Daily News indicate that many lines of consumer goods, of which there has been scarcity for years during the war, are coming back on the market. A recent bulletin tells for instance, that there is plenty of aluminum and only the question of manpower is holding up production of manufactured articles. Elastic is another commodity that is coming back on the market gradually. There will be a similar story with many other lines in the near future, no doubt.

In fact we are already in the midst of the transition from wartime to civilian production, notwithstanding the fact that the Japanese war is not yet over.

There would, however, to be no reason for a frenzied rush of buying. Those who wait a little longer will probably do better in the end, both from the standpoint of quality of goods and prices paid. Spreading out of the buying will also steady out the national economy. Local merchants may not be any too well stocked as yet in many lines but a few months at the outside should see a great change in the situation. Before we realize it we will probably be back again to "business as usual."

THIS AND THAT

"So you're Mary's blind date for tonight . . . well . . . well . . ."
