ALASKA HIGHWAY

Here is a new map showing the proposed Alaska Highway routes through British Columbia. First is the original route of immemorial travel of immigrants from Asia to this continent and which is known as the "Hazelton-Whitehorse project." This is the route, following a valley immediately east of the Coast Range, that many advocates consider infinitely more suitable than any others because of its proximity to the coast and the possibility of connection with the Alaska Panhandle, the entry it would give to the great Groundhog coal country, the comparatively favorable construction possibilities and other reasons. The map also shows a more recently proposed route from Prince George to Watson Lake through Fort St. James to Whitehorse through Western Stikine Mountains. There is also the "B" route from Prince George northward to Watson Lake through a valley between the Rockies and the Stikine Mountains. Premier John Hart a year ago announced that no decision would be made on any of these projects until all, including Hazelton, had been surveyed.
